I. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE; ASSUMPTION OF RISK

1. IN GENERAL

§ 456. In General

As a general rule, a person who sustains injuries from the operation of a motor vehicle cannot recover therefor, notwithstanding negligence on the part of the defendant, if his own negligence was a direct and contributing cause of his injury.

It is a general rule, applicable in actions for injuries sustained from the operation of motor vehicles as in other cases, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise, that a person whose negligence proximately contributes to his own injuries cannot recover for such injuries, notwithstanding negligence on the part of defendant,⁹¹ and where, in an action for damages resulting from a collision between motor vehicles, defendant interposes a counterclaim or prosecutes a cross complaint, neither party can recover if his negligence contributed to the injury.⁹² However, the general rule that contributory negligence will bar recovery is subject to qualification where the doctrine of comparative negligence is recognized, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 169-173, also 42 C.J. p 1185 notes 76-80; 45 C.J. p 1036 note 96-p 1043 note 62, or where the so-called "humanitarian" doctrine or that of last clear chance is applicable, infra § 493 (2), or where defendant's conduct was willful or wanton, supra § 258. Also, the mere fact of negligence on the part of the injured person will not preclude recovery by him unless such negligence was a direct and contributing cause of his injury,⁹³ although it need not have been the sole proximate cause thereof.⁹⁴ Plaintiff's negligence or freedom from negligence with respect to an automobile accident becomes immaterial where it appears that defendant was not negligent.⁹⁵ Where a person is injured by reason of the concurrent negligence of the operators of vehicles involved in a collision, his right of recovery does not depend on the applicability of the doctrines of contributory negligence or

Concurrent contributing factor
In order for negligence of motorist who was thrown onto highway when his automobile overturned and was struck by defendant's automobile to bar recovery for death of motorist, the motorist's negligence must have been a concurrent contributing factor existing and efficient at the very time of the accident, regardless of whether defendant's negligence was primary or subsequent negligence.—*Heffelfinger v. last clear chance as applied to the conduct of the operators of the vehicles involved.⁹⁶

Assumption of risk. The doctrine of assumption of risk may apply so as to bar recovery by a person injured as the result of the operation of a motor vehicle.⁹⁷

§ 457. What Constitutes Contributory Negligence

With respect to the question what constitutes contributory negligence, every person using the highway is required to exercise ordinary care for his own safety and protection and that of his property, or that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances to avoid danger.

With respect to the question what constitutes contributory negligence sufficient to bar recovery for injuries suffered from the operation of motor vehicles, it is generally the rule that every person using the highway, whether a pedestrian, a rider of an animal, or a driver of, or passenger in, a vehicle, is required to exercise ordinary care for his own safety and protection and that of his property,⁹⁸ or that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances to avoid danger;⁹⁹ and the care required is proportionate to the danger involved,¹ under all the circumstances of the particular case.² Extraordinary care³ or the highest degree of caution⁴ is not required, unless specifically so provided by statute,⁵ and, hence, when ordinary and reasonable care is exercised, there is no contributory negligence.⁶

Danger incurred to save life or property. Generally, where the negligence of defendant in the operation of a motor vehicle has imperiled human life, a person who takes such steps as are reasonably necessary to rescue or protect those imperiled is not contributorily negligent in voluntarily leaving a place of safety and incurring danger if he does not act with recklessness which would not be warranted under the circumstances in the judgment of a prudent man.⁷ However, a person injured by a motor vehicle as a consequence of going to the rescue of another may avail himself of this rule only where engaged in a "rescue" within the purview of the rule,⁸ and the rule may not be applied as against a defendant not responsible for placing the person being rescued in a position of peril.⁹

§ 458. — Duty to Discover Danger

In the exercise of due care, a person using the highway is required to make reasonable use of his senses and intelligence to observe and discover impending danger; but he is not strictly bound to see or to avoid collision with, or injury from, all vehicles upon the street, and is not required to exercise an infallible judgment with respect to approaching vehicles.

In the exercise of due care a person using the highway is required to make reasonable use of his senses and intelligence to observe and discover impending danger,¹⁰ and the duty to look implies a duty to see what is in plain sight,¹¹ so that, if the danger is visible and obvious, his failure to discover and avoid it amounts to contributory negligence,¹² unless some reasonable explanation is shown for not so doing,¹³ but he is not strictly bound to see or to avoid collision with, or injury from, all vehicles upon the street;¹⁴ nor is he required to exercise with respect to approaching vehicles an infallible judgment.¹⁵ A traveler on the highway is not required to anticipate extraordinary hazards or constantly to expect and search for unusual dangers.¹⁶

There is no imperative rule requiring him to be constantly looking and listening for the approach of an automobile under the penalty that on failure to do so his own negligence will be conclusively presumed if he is injured;¹⁷ and it is not necessarily negligence to fail to look for such danger when under the surrounding circumstances there is no reason to apprehend it.¹⁸

§ 459. — Reliance on Care of Person Causing Injury

A user of the highway is not guilty of contributory negligence in assuming, in the absence of knowledge or notice to the contrary, that others using it in common with him will comply with the law and use ordinary care to avoid injuring him; but he cannot for that reason omit any of the care which the law otherwise demands of him.

Under the rule that the rights of all persons using the public highways are reciprocal, as discussed supra § 246, any person upon the highway has the right to assume, in the absence of knowledge or notice to the contrary, that others using it in common with him will use ordinary care to avoid injuring him,¹⁹ and he may assume that they will conform to and not violate the statutes or ordinances²⁰ and apprehension thereof from plaintiff's standpoint.³³ It has been held that a traveler on the highway cannot wholly ignore conditions which he knows to exist or be relieved of responsibility with which he is charged by claiming that the known condition is an emergency.³⁴

§ 461. — Violation of Statute or Ordinance

Regulations prescribing rules of traffic establish rules of conduct which constitute standards for testing contributory negligence. The violation of a regulation may constitute evidence of negligence or negligence per se which will bar the right of recovery if it contributes to the injury.

Statutes or municipal ordinances prescribing the rules of traffic have been held to establish rules of conduct which constitute the standards for testing contributory negligence,³⁵ as well as negligence, as discussed supra §§ 248, 268, 269.

In accordance with the variance of opinion among the authorities as to the effect to be given to the violation of a statute or ordinance as establishing negligence, it has been held that such violation by a person who sustains injuries as a result of the operation of a motor vehicle upon the highway is not in itself contributory negligence,³⁶ although it may be evidence thereof,³⁷ and, contrarily, that it is negligence per se.³⁸ The rule that such violation constitutes negligence is, however, subject to the qualification that, if it is necessary in an emergency, under all the circumstances, in an attempt to avoid an accident, to act otherwise than as the law or ordinance prescribes, the violation is not contributory negligence or evidence thereof;³⁹ and, where the act constituting the violation is occasioned by the negligent act of defendant, he cannot rely on such violation as contributory negligence.⁴⁰ No question of imputed negligence arises between persons all of whom are mutually engaged in illegal conduct.⁴¹

Where the violation of a statute or ordinance constitutes negligence, either by itself or under the circumstances, it will bar the right of recovery if it contributes to the injury,⁴² but recovery will not be barred where the violation is not a direct and contributing cause of the injury.⁴³

sion with another vehicle or other accident resulting from the negligent operation of another vehicle where negligence in the operation of his own car contributed to the accident, but what constitutes contributory negligence barring recovery depends on the circumstances of the particular case.

As a general rule, the owner or operator of an automobile cannot recover for injuries to himself or to his vehicle sustained in a collision with another vehicle or other accident resulting from the negligence of the operator of another vehicle, where negligence in the operation of his own car contributed to the accident,⁴⁴ except under the "last clear chance" or "humanitarian" doctrine, as discussed infra § 493 (2), or that of comparative negligence, as considered in the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 169-173, also 42 C.J. p 1185 notes 76-80; 45 C.J. p 1036

note 96-p 1043 note 62, or where the conduct of defendant was wanton or willful, as discussed supra § 258. However, negligence of the operator of a vehicle will not preclude recovery unless such negligence was a direct and contributing cause of the injury.⁴⁵ What constitutes contributory negligence of a motor vehicle operator depends on the circumstances of the particular case,⁴⁶ and it has been held that no fixed rule can be laid down in automobile collision cases on the question of contributory negligence,⁴⁷ but that each case must be determined by general principles which have been definitely established.⁴⁸ Since the duty of care rests on all users of the highway alike, as discussed supra § 246, and since the same acts or omissions constitute negligence whether the person chargeable therewith is

Sole or contributory cause

A motorist's negligence need not have been sole proximate cause of injuries sustained by him in collision with truck, standing on highway ahead of him, to bar recovery of damages therefor, as "contributory negligence" signifies contribution to, rather than independent or sole cause of, injury, and bars recovery if it contributes to injury as a proximate cause or one of proximate causes thereof.—Tyson v. Ford, 47 S.E.2d 251, 228 N.C. 778.

Conduct following collision

In order to prevent recovery for defendant's negligence, allegedly resulting in injuries following a collision, plaintiff's conduct following collision must have been either negligent or independent of defendant's negligence.—Molloy v. Mitchell, 137 So. 896, 223 Ala. 666.

No prescribed act

Where two motor vehicles collide, there is no prescribed act which will constitute contributory negligence, and the only rule which can be followed in ascertaining plaintiff's responsibility for the accident under the circumstances is the rule of negligence as to what a reasonably prudent man would do under similar circumstances.—Washam v. Peerless Automatic Staple Mach. Co., 113 P.2d 724, 45 Cal.App.2d 174.

plaintiff or defendant in an action arising out of a collision between vehicles or other accident resulting from the negligent operation of one vehicle with respect to another, the duties of both drivers have hereinbefore been discussed together, supra §§ 246-377.

It has been held that a driver has the right, after first feeling contact between his vehicle and another, to take prudent measures to protect his property from further damage provided he exercises reasonable care for his own safety in doing so.⁴⁹

b. Negligence of Operator as Affecting Rights of Owner

The owner of a motor vehicle damaged in a collision with another vehicle may recover for such damage notwithstanding the negligence of the operator of his vehicle contributed to the accident where the relation of the parties is such as not to make the owner responsible for the negligence of the operator.

Where the owner of a motor vehicle damaged in a collision and the operator thereof stand in such a relation to each other that the negligence of the operator will be imputed to the owner, as where they are master and servant or principal and agent, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 157-168, also 45 C.J. p 1019 note 19-p 1036 note 95, the owner will be precluded from recovering for such damage against the owner or operator of the other vehicle involved in the collision, notwithstanding the negligence of the latter,⁵⁰ unless the negligence of the operator of plaintiff's vehicle was not a contributing cause of the accident.⁵¹ Similarly, the owner of goods in a vehicle damaged by a collision with defendant's vehicle may be barred from recovering for damage to such goods where the owner and operator of the vehicle in which the goods were carried were contributorily negligent.⁵²

The owner of a motor vehicle may recover for injuries thereto, however, notwithstanding the injuries resulted from the combined negligence of the operator of his vehicle and the operator of another vehicle with which it collided where the relation of the parties is such as not to make the owner responsible for the negligence of the operator of his vehicle, as where the vehicle was being operated by a person who had taken it without any authority or right,⁵³ or by a person to whom the owner had loaned it, and who was at the time using it for his own purposes,⁵⁴ unless he knew that the person to whom he had loaned the car was a careless, inefficient, and unskilled driver,⁵⁵ or was not licensed as required by statute.⁵⁶ Similarly, the owner of a trailer may recover for damages thereto notwithstanding the negligence of the operator of the trac-

Where plaintiff, whose truck had been struck by defendant's automobile, was compelled to move bumper before he could drive truck, plaintiff's act in pulling bumper away from front wheel after having felt a pain on his left side at moment of collision did not constitute negligence contributing to hernias from which plaintiff was thereafter found to be suffering.—Abdow v. § 463. Motorcyclists

A motorcyclist must exercise ordinary care for his own safety and usually cannot recover for injuries to which his own negligence contributed, but, in order to bar recovery, such negligence must be a direct and contributing cause of the injury.

A motorcycle rider is required to exercise ordinary care for his own protection and safety,⁵⁸ and cannot recover for injuries to himself or to his vehicle to which his own negligence contributed,⁵⁹ except under the last clear chance or humanitarian doctrine, as discussed infra § 493, or that of comparative negligence, as considered in the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 169-173, also 42 C.J. p 1185 notes 76-80; 45 C.J. p 1036 note 96-p 1043 note 62, or where the conduct of defendant was wanton or willful, as discussed supra § 258. However, contributory negligence on the part of a motorcyclist is a matter of defense,⁶⁰ and will not preclude recovery for injuries sustained by him unless such negligence was a direct and contributing cause of his injury.⁶¹

Since motorcycles are included within the term "motor vehicle," as discussed supra § 6, the rights and duties of a motorcyclist, and his particular acts as constituting negligence or contributory negligence, have been considered together with those of the operators of other motor vehicles supra §§ 246-377.

§ 464. Bicyclists

- a. In general
- b. Entering upon or crossing highway or intersection

a. In General

Bicyclists generally have the same rights as automobile drivers to the use of the highway, and are subject to the same obligations. Failure to use due care or to comply with regulations may constitute contributory negligence which will bar recovery if it is a direct contributing cause of injury.

With respect to the contributory negligence of a bicycle rider injured by a motor vehicle, bicyclists generally have the same rights as automobile drivers to the use of the highway,⁶² and usually are subject to the same obligations,⁶³ and must conform to the same standards of care.⁶⁴ Accordingly, in determining the right of a bicyclist to recover for injuries inflicted by a motor vehicle, it has been held that the bicyclist must exercise such care, for his own protection and safety, as an ordinary, cautious, and prudent person would exercise under the same circumstances,⁶⁵ although, where he is a minor, he is chargeable only with such care as would be exercised by a prudent person of like age and experience.⁶⁶ Where a bicyclist has been placed in a dangerous situation by another's negligence, he

Minor

An eighteen-year-old motorcyclist injured in collision with automobile would be guilty of contributory negligence if he did something which an ordinarily prudent person of the same age and experience would not have done.—Gunter v. Claggett, 151 P.2d 271, 65 Cal.App.2d 636.

need exercise only ordinary care in the emergency,⁶⁷ and the fact that his conduct, in other circumstances, would be negligent,⁶⁸ or that he failed to adopt a safe or the safest course,⁶⁹ will not constitute contributory negligence.

It has been held, with respect to contributory negligence, that a bicyclist must observe the rules of the road and traffic regulations governing motor vehicles,⁷⁰ unless such regulations are limited to vehicles propelled by other than human power,⁷¹ and that he must comply with regulations expressly applicable to bicycle riders.⁷² The youth of the rider does not ordinarily exempt him from the operation of laws designed to regulate the conduct of travelers on public ways,⁷³ but it has been held that a regulation making it a crime for a bicyclist to operate his bicycle in a certain way must be construed together with a statute prohibiting the conviction of children, below a certain age, for crimes in considering the question of a child's contributory negligence in violating the regulation.⁷⁴ It has been held that the violation of regulations governing the conduct of bicyclists may constitute negligence per se,⁷⁵ but according to other decisions, such a violation does not make the bicyclist a trespasser or nuisance on the highway,⁷⁶ and constitutes merely evidence of negligence.⁷⁷

The contributory negligence of a bicyclist in violating some traffic regulation or breaching some other duty imposed by law will preclude his recovery for injuries inflicted by a motor vehicle where such violation or breach of duty is a direct and contributing cause of the injuries.⁷⁸ Such a violation or breach of duty, however, does not, in all cases, constitute negligence as a matter of law barring recovery,⁷⁹ and the bicyclist will not be precluded from recovering unless his negligence proximately contributed to the injury,⁸⁰ or had some causal connection with it.⁸¹ The violation of a regulation is not necessarily the contributing cause of a collision between a bicyclist and a motorist,⁸² and it is no defense, in the absence of a showing that the accident would not have happened if there had been a compliance with the law.⁸³ In any case, contributory negligence of a bicyclist will not bar recovery where the negligent conduct of the operator of the motor vehicle was willful or wanton.⁸⁴

When bicyclist saw automobile parked seventy five feet away on curve in narrow street and knew that his view around such curve was obstructed, he was bound to realize that he would not be able to determine whether he could pass automobile in safety until he was the question, being overtaken by⁹⁵ a motor vehicle, or riding by its side or close to it,⁹⁶ meeting a motor vehicle coming from the opposite direction,⁹⁷ colliding with an automobile which turns against the bicycle or into its path,⁹⁸ or "hitching" a ride by holding on to a moving motor vehicle.⁹⁹

Reliance on care of motorist causing injury. In respect of whether the acts or conduct of a bicyclist constitutes contributory negligence, he has the right, in the absence of notice to the contrary, to assume, and to act on such assumption, that other users of the highway will exercise reasonable and ordinary care for his safety,¹ and will observe the rules of the road and traffic regulations.² However, he may not rely on due care by others to relieve himself from the obligation to exercise reasonable care for his own safety.³

Compliance with regulations

(1) As respects contributory negligence bicyclists, while traveling on highways, are controlled by statute requiring meeting vehicles to turn to right.—Haynes v. Sprague, 295 P. 964, 137 Or. 23.

(2) Minor, who was riding bicycle along right side of street and who crossed center line to sidewalk on left in front of approaching automobile, sustaining injuries in resultant collision, violated criminal statute providing that, when persons traveling with vehicles meet on a way, each should drive his vehicle to right of middle of way.—Patrican v. Garvey, 190 N.E. 9, 287 Mass. 62.

b. Entering upon or Crossing Highway or Intersection

A bicyclist who enters upon or starts to cross a highway or intersection must use due care to observe other vehicles and avoid collision therewith, and his failure to do so may constitute contributory negligence barring recovery.

A bicyclist who enters upon or starts to cross a street does not exercise common prudence if he fails to look for approaching vehicles,⁴ and he is guilty of negligence if he runs directly into the path of a motor vehicle,⁵ or if he tries to cross ahead of a motor vehicle which is only a short distance away and which he sees approaching⁶ or which he must have seen if he had looked,⁷ unless he could fairly assume that he might safely cross before the automobile reached him.⁸ A bicycle rider who enters upon a highway from a private driveway, where his vision is obscured, is not free from contributory

Riding in vicinity of school

Minor who was struck by automobile when minor rode bicycle through a short driveway into street was entitled to take into account the probability that motorist in approaching driveway would regard the presence of a school and the likelihood that negligence when he is struck by an automobile which had given warning signals as it approached the driveway.⁹ Crossing a roadway diagonally at a place where there is no crosswalk, with the knowledge that automobiles are approaching, may be negligence as a matter of law.¹⁰ A bicyclist crossing an alley on the sidewalk line is not guilty of negligence because a moment before he had been riding on the sidewalk in violation of ordinance.¹¹

At intersections. On approaching a street intersection it is the duty of a bicycle rider so to operate his machine as to be able to control it and stop or turn to avoid a collision with another vehicle,¹² and to look in such intelligent and careful manner as to be able to see what a person in the exercise of reasonable care and caution would see under like circumstances;¹³ but there is no duty resting on him to keep a special lookout for an automobile on an intersecting street, beyond the general duty to exercise due care.¹⁴ A bicyclist entering an intersection before an automobile has the right of way,¹⁵ and under some regulations, a bicycle rider approaching an intersection from the right of an automobile has the right of way.¹⁶ A bicyclist having the right of way may, under normal conditions, proceed uninterruptedly in the direction in which he is moving,¹⁷ in preference to an automobile turning into his path from the left.¹⁸ However, although the bicyclist may have the right of way, he must proceed in a lawful manner¹⁹ and exercise care to avoid colliding with motor vehicles across whose path he must travel.²⁰

A bicyclist making a turn at an intersection is under a duty to use due care to observe, and avoid collision with, approaching vehicles.²¹ Failure to go beyond the center of an intersection in turning is not negligence as a matter of law, under an ordinance requiring vehicles turning to pass beyond the center and to keep close to the right-hand curb, when the bicyclist follows the customary path into the intersecting street, and when neither street has any curbing or any indication of the curb line.²²

Ordinarily, negligence of a bicyclist contributing to an intersectional collision with a motor vehicle will bar recovery,²³ except where the doctrine of "last clear chance" is applicable, as discussed infra § 493; but it has been held that, in order to be barred from recovery, the bicyclist must have violated some governmental regulation,²⁴ or the facts must be such that no other conclusion than that bicyclist was negligent may be drawn.²⁵

§ 465. Drivers or Occupants of Horse-Drawn Vehicles

It is not in itself negligence to drive a horse or other draft animal upon a highway frequented by motor vehicles, but the driver must exercise reasonable care to avoid accident or injury or be barred from recovering therefor if his failure to use due care is a direct and contributing cause of the injury.

It is not in itself negligence to drive a horse or other draft animal upon a highway frequented by motor vehicles²⁶ even though there is a nearby par-

A bicyclist had no right to assume that approaching automobile would not make left turn at intersection, in absence of ordinance or other regulation prohibiting such left turn.—Harris v. Brock, La.App., 191 So. 762.

Where defendant's truck driver approaching intersection with intent to make a left turn placed minor bicyclist in a perilous situation, defendant could not contend that bicyclist should have done something different to avoid the collision.—Johnson v. allel road less used by automobiles and upon which horse-drawn vehicles usually travel.²⁷ It has also been held that it is not negligence per se to drive on the highway a horse of ordinarily gentle and tractable habits merely because it occasionally becomes frightened at a motor vehicle,²⁸ but one who drives a horse known to be greatly afraid of automobiles does so at his own peril.²⁹ In any case, the driver must exercise such care and caution to avoid accident or injury as an ordinarily prudent person would use under like circumstances³⁰ and comply with all regulations,³¹ and the failure to use such care may bar recovery for injuries sustained from the operation of a motor vehicle if such negligence is a direct and contributing cause of the injuries.³² The driver of a horse-drawn vehicle has the right to rely on the use of due care by operators of motor vehicles using the highway³³ and he need not anticipate that a motorist will be negligent.³⁴

The rule requiring the exercise of due care and barring recovery for failure to use such care has been applied in determining the effect of plaintiff's conduct with respect to particular acts or with respect to particular situations,³⁵ as, for example, in entering upon or crossing a highway,³⁶ approaching or crossing a street intersection,³⁷ traveling on the wrong side of the road,³⁸ leaving his horse and vehicle unattended,³⁹ driving carelessly and inattentively⁴⁰ or while intoxicated,⁴¹ or in driving without lights or reflectors.⁴²

When a horse becomes frightened by the approach of a motor vehicle, the failure of the driver to signal the operator of the automobile to stop is not necessarily negligence,⁴³ and whether it is such depends on the facts of the particular case.⁴⁴ An attempt to drive a frightened horse past an automobile may constitute negligence⁴⁵ unless there is no other reasonable course for the driver to pursue, and he exercises due care in so doing.⁴⁶ A person riding in a horse-drawn vehicle is not guilty of negligence per se in remaining in the vehicle when the horse becomes frightened at an approaching automobile,⁴⁷ although he may be negligent in alighting from the vehicle;⁴⁸ and it is not necessarily negligence to jump from the vehicle in an attempt to avoid injury.⁴⁹

Meeting motor vehicle. The driver of a horse-drawn vehicle who keeps to the center of the highway when he sees an approaching automobile or its lights is guilty of negligence,⁵⁰ but he is not necessarily negligent in being in the center of the roadway while passing around another vehicle parked at the curb.⁵¹ It is not negligence to stop a well-broken horse close to the side of the road when a motor vehicle approaches.⁵²

Being overtaken by motor vehicle. A driver of a vehicle drawn by a horse or other draft animal is, in the absence of knowledge or warning, under no duty to look for motor vehicles approaching from the rear,⁵³ and he is not necessarily negligent in failing to control his team frightened by the approach of a motor vehicle from behind without any warning.⁵⁴ However, if the driver of the horse-drawn vehicle knows that a motor vehicle is approaching from the rear, he must act with reasonable prudence in the light of such knowledge,⁵⁵ and if he veers to the left without notice of warning,⁵⁶ or suddenly slackens his speed or stops,⁵⁷ when the automobile is so close that its operator has no reasonable opportunity to avoid the collision, he may be guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery. A driver who has warning of the intention of the operator of a motor vehicle to overtake him has the duty, sometimes by virtue of express regulation, to yield the center of the road and drive to the right, where such movement is necessary to permit the motor vehicle to pass safely,⁵⁸ unless in the exercise of due care and prudence it is impossible for him to move to the right;⁵⁹ but either under such a regulation⁶⁰ or in its absence⁶¹ he may continue on his course, and is not bound to go to the extreme right side of the roadway, if there is sufficient room for the automobile to pass to his left without undue interference.

§ 466. Persons on Horseback

A person riding horseback on a public highway is bound to use ordinary care for his own safety and property, with respect to an injury incurred through the operation of a motor vehicle by another, and the failure to use such care may constitute contributory negligence barring recovery against the motorist.

A person riding horseback on a public highway is bound to use ordinary care for his own safety and property, with respect to an injury incurred through the operation of a motor vehicle by another,⁶² and whether such care is exercised depends on the particular circumstances of each case.⁶³ The failure to use such care may constitute contributory negligence barring recovery against the motorist,⁶⁴ as, for example, where a person rides a horse at a high rate of speed on a perilous road at nighttime and runs into a lighted automobile,⁶⁵ or where a person rides a horse which he knows is easily frightened and hard to handle, and remains upon it without indicating to the driver of an approaching motor vehicle that he has any fear of his ability to manage and control it.⁶⁶ It is not, however, negligence per se to ride a horse which may be frightened by automobiles along a road frequented by them⁶⁷ unless the horse is wild and dangerous.⁶⁸

68. Va.—Cohen v. Meador, supra.

A horseback rider approaching an intersecting street is not as a matter of law negligent in failing to look up and down such street for automobiles before attempting to ride across it,⁶⁹ nor is one riding a horse on a highway required constantly to look back for approaching motor vehicles.⁷⁰ In the absence of a regulation providing otherwise, a person riding a horse along the highway is not required at all times and under all conditions to remain on the right side of the road;⁷¹ and it is not negligence for a rider to be on the left side of the road, when his position there is caused by the actions of his frightened horse which he is unable to control.⁷² Ordinarily a rider on horseback at a place in the public road where he has the right to be is not guilty of negligence in refusing to leave the beaten path to permit a motor vehicle to pass him.⁷³

§ 467. Persons in Charge of Animals

A person in charge of an animal on a highway is bound to use reasonable care to avoid injury from a motor vehicle, and his failure to exercise such care may constitute contributory negligence precluding recovery.

As a general rule, a person in charge of animals has a right to lead or drive them along the highway,⁷⁴ but in so doing he must exercise reasonable care to avoid any injury from motor vehicles using the highway,⁷⁵ and the failure to exercise such care may constitute contributory negligence precluding recovery for injury sustained,⁷⁶ if it was a direct and contributing cause of the injury.⁷⁷ The negligence of a person in charge of an animal or animals on the highway is not to be determined by his want of qualification for the task, but by whether or not he was guilty of some act or omission constituting a want of due care.⁷⁸ A person leading an animal along the highway is entitled to assume that a motorist will exercise common caution and will obey statutory regulations, and will not run upon him suddenly and without warning.⁷⁹

Duty to look or listen. A person driving animals along a highway is, in the absence of knowledge or warning, under no duty as a matter of law to look or listen for the approach of motor vehicles from behind him;⁸⁰ and he is not necessarily negligent in failing to see a motor vehicle, which he could have seen if he had looked, because his attention was directed to the animals in his charge.⁸¹

Harnessing or restraining animals. A person in charge of domestic animals upon the public highway is not guilty of negligence per se because they are driven without being haltered or restrained in any way,⁸² but leaving a horse unfastened and unattended on the public highway has been held to constitute contributory negligence.⁸³

Lights. In the absence of a statute requiring lights, a failure on the part of one driving animals along a public highway at night to carry a light is not negligence as a matter of law,⁸⁴ and will not preclude recovery for injuries from a motor vehicle when the lights of the car render the animals visible in time to avoid a collision.⁸⁵

Rules of the road; position on highway. It has been held that the mere fact that a person is leading animals on a highway does not bring him within the rules of the road applicable to vehicles⁸⁶ so as to require him to proceed on the right side of the road;⁸⁷ nor is he considered to be a pedestrian so as to be governed by regulations requiring pedestrians to keep to the left of the highway facing oncoming traffic.⁸⁸ In other words, in the absence of a regulation providing otherwise, such a person has the right to lead or drive his animals on any part of the highway not then occupied or in use by another traveler,⁸⁹ subject to the rule that plaintiff, in respect of his position on the highway, must have exercised reasonable care under the circumstances.⁹⁰ It has been held, on the other hand, that the ordinary rules of the road, such as the duty to keep to the right, apply to the driving of animals in the highway,⁹¹ and the driver must use reasonable care to keep them on the proper side of the road,⁹² although it is not in itself negligence to permit them to be upon the wrong side of the road, because of the difficulty in so driving them.⁹³ The driver under such circumstances is bound to use more care and keep a better lookout for approaching vehicles than would be required of him if they were upon the right side.⁹⁴

Dogs. To release a dog from its leash on a street is not in itself negligence, as respects the owner's right to recover for injury to the dog by an automobile,⁹⁵ and the standard of prudence marking the conduct of the average careful creature cannot be exacted of a dog.⁹⁶ It has been held that a dog accompanying its owner along a highway is not within a statute prohibiting dogs at large⁹⁷ and that recovery for the negligent killing of such a dog by a motorist is not barred by contributory negligence on the ground that the statute had been violated.⁹⁸ It has also been held that a motorist who is guilty of gross negligence in the killing of a dog may not rely on the fact that the owner was likewise guilty of contributory negligence in allowing his dog to go on the highway in violation of such a statute.⁹⁹

§ 468. Pedestrians

- a. In general
- b. Degree and amount of care required
- c. Persons on private property or private ways

a. In General

A pedestrian ordinarily has the right, subject to proper governmental regulation, to use and traverse any part of the public street or highway, but he must do so with due regard for the rights of motor vehicles and exercise due care for his own safety; and the failure to exercise such care may constitute negligence barring recovery for an injury inflicted by a motor vehicle if the negligence was a proximate or contributing cause of the injury.

Ordinarily a pedestrian, in the exercise of reasonable care for his own safety, has the right, subject to proper governmental regulation, to use and traverse any part of the public street or highway,¹ charge of contributory negligence.⁸ The contributory negligence of a pedestrian injured by a motor vehicle must be determined without regard to the negligence of the driver of the vehicle.⁹

A pedestrian who has failed to use due care for his own safety may be precluded by his negligence from recovering for injury resulting to him from the operation of a motor vehicle,¹⁰ whether such negligence was the sole proximate cause of the injury¹¹ or was merely a contributing cause of the accident which resulted in part from the negligence of the operator of the vehicle;¹² but contributory negligence will not bar recovery where the motorist was guilty of willful or wanton negligence,¹³ or where the so-called last clear chance rule is applicable, as discussed infra § 493, or where the doctrine of comparative negligence is applied, as is discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 169-173, also 42 C.J. p 1185 notes 76-80, and 45 C.J. p 1036

note 96-p 1043 note 62. In any case, the pedestrian's negligence will not bar recovery if it did not proximately cause or contribute to the injury,¹⁴ and the fact that the pedestrian would not have been injured if he had not been where he was at the time of the accident is not of itself controlling in determining whether his contributory negligence was a direct contributing cause to the accident.¹⁵

Working about motor vehicles. Persons working about motor vehicles, as in loading or unloading them, or assisting therein, or guiding such vehicles into position, must use due care for their own safety¹⁶ and avoid injury by the vehicle¹⁷ or by the articles being loaded or unloaded.¹⁸

course is not guilty of negligence as a matter of law.¹⁹

b. Degree and Amount of Care Required

A pedestrian is generally held to that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances to prevent injury from a motor vehicle, and the care required, as with respect to use of the senses to discover danger, is commensurate with the risk of danger involved.

In determining the right of a pedestrian to recover for injuries inflicted by a motor vehicle, he is generally held to that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances to prevent injury.²⁰ No pedestrian has the right to pass over a public thoroughfare unmindful of his surroundings and without regard to approaching motor vehicles,²¹ whose presence on the highway he must anticipate,²² and he is required to use ordinary care not unnecessarily to place himself in a position of danger.²³ So it may be contributory negligence as a matter of law for a pedestrian to move from a place of safety into the path of an automobile.²⁴ However, a pedestrian is not bound as a matter of law to exercise such a degree of care as will be necessary to protect himself in all circumstances from the danger of a collision with an automobile,²⁵ and when he is in the exercise of due care he is not strictly required to use every conceivable precaution in an attempt to avoid injury.²⁶

While the duty to use due care is a continuing one,²⁷ the amount of care required varies with the circumstances²⁸ and is commensurate with the risk of danger involved.²⁹ A pedestrian occupying a portion of a public or private way customarily used by vehicles must use greater care than when on the sidewalk,³⁰ and at points in a busy street not frequently traversed by pedestrians a higher degree of care is imposed on him to avoid any injury.³¹ Also, a pedestrian may be required to exercise greater care when using the highway away from a crosswalk than when at a crosswalk.³²

A pedestrian has the duty to use his natural senses to discover the approach of an automobile and to avoid being injured thereby,³³ and such duty may require him to keep a vigilant lookout³⁴ and to see what is obviously to be seen.³⁵ The extent of the lookout required depends on the circumstances³⁶ and on what a person of ordinary prudence would do under such circumstances;³⁷ and, while the pedestrian must look at least in those directions from which danger may reasonably be apprehended,³⁸ he need not use his senses to look for and to apprehend danger from every possible direction and at all times.³⁹

Compliance with governmental regulations. It is incumbent on a pedestrian to comply with all regulations governing the conduct of persons on foot who use the highway,⁴⁰ but the statutory rules for the guidance of pedestrians have been held to prescribe only the minimum measure of care to be exercised, and additional precautions may be required under the circumstances.⁴¹ Some regulations making it an offense for a pedestrian to use a highway negligently or recklessly have been held to establish no standard with respect to negligence other than that of the common law.⁴²

Reliance on care of motorist causing injury. In determining the extent of the care required of a pedestrian, it is generally held that he has the right, in the absence of knowledge or notice to the contrary, to assume, and to act on such assumption, that motorists on the highway will exercise reasonable care and prudence in the use thereof⁴³ to avoid injuring him;⁴⁴ and he need not anticipate that a motor vehicle will be driven negligently⁴⁵ in violation of regulations and rules of the road.⁴⁶ It has been held, however, that such right of assumption applies only in favor of a pedestrian whose conduct measures up to the standard of due care⁴⁷ and that a pedestrian may not rest content on such assumption and take no care for his own safety.⁴⁸ A pedestrian who has actual or constructive notice of the motorist's negligence and of the danger created thereby must use due care under the circumstances to avoid being injured,⁴⁹ and if he fails to exercise such care he will be guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery.⁵⁰

Acts in emergencies. Where a pedestrian is confronted by a sudden emergency and imminent peril due to the negligent acts of a motorist, his actions are not to be judged by what he should have done if he had an opportunity to deliberate,⁵¹ and he is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence in failing to exercise the best judgment in the emergency;⁵² in such case, his conduct is to be judged by the standard of what a prudent person would be likely to do under the same circumstances.⁵³ However, the pedestrian is not entitled to the benefits of this rule where his own negligence placed him in the perilous position⁵⁴ or where the circumstances did not constitute an emergency.⁵⁵

c. Persons on Private Property or Private Ways

Ordinarily a person standing on private property adjacent to a street or highway need not anticipate that a motor vehicle will enter the premises and inflict injury, and a lower degree of care is required of a person on foot in a private way, sometimes used by motor vehicles, than is required of pedestrians in a public street.

Ordinarily a person standing on private property adjacent to a street or highway need not observe traffic on the highway or anticipate that a motor vehicle will enter the premises and inflict injury;⁵⁶ but, if the use of a person's land extends an invitation to motorists to come onto the property for parking or for any other purpose, such person must anticipate that vehicles may enter on the premises and cause injury.⁵⁷

§ 469. — Walking along Street or Highway

- a. In general
- b. Care required generally
- c. Reliance on care of motorists
- d. Keeping lookout
- e. Walking on left
- f. Stepping aside to allow motor vehicle to pass
- g. Right to recover for injury

a. In General

In the absence of statutory restriction, a pedestrian traveling along a street or highway ordinarily may walk on the roadway, or on any part thereof, even if a sidewalk or footpath is available, and he is not negligent as a matter of law in so doing.

Under some statutory provisions, where a portion of a highway has been prepared for use by pedestrians, one walking along a highway may be restricted to the use of that portion of the road.⁶² In the absence of statutory restriction, however, a pedestrian traveling on a street or highway is not confined to the use of the sidewalk or footpath,⁶³ and ordinarily he has a right to walk in the roadway⁶⁴ or on any part thereof,⁶⁵ at any time of day or night,⁶⁶ and is not negligent as a matter of law,⁶⁷ or negligent per se,⁶⁸ in so doing. Where not in contravention of a statutory restriction, the right of a pedestrian to travel along a highway has been held equal to that of a motorist,⁶⁹ as where there are no sidewalks or footpaths available for his use⁷⁰ or where the sidewalks or footpaths are covered with ice or snow.⁷¹

A pedestrian may have the right to walk along any part of the highway, in the absence of statutory restriction, even if a sidewalk is available⁷² or if he could walk outside the traveled roadway.⁷³

While ordinarily a pedestrian need not walk on the berm or shoulder of the road, rather than on the paved portion,⁷⁴ he has, as a rule, a legal right to walk thereon,⁷⁵ and he may not be considered negligent in so doing.⁷⁶ However, walking in the middle of the road, under some circumstances, may constitute negligence.⁷⁷ A pedestrian traveling along the portion of a road prescribed for his use has no right of way thereon over a motorist except as provided by statute.⁷⁸

b. Care Required Generally

A pedestrian walking along a highway should use due or reasonable care commensurate with the circumstances for his own safety and protection, but he need not exercise extraordinary care.

A pedestrian walking along a roadway is, like every other user of the public highway, required to use due or reasonable care commensurate with the circumstances for his own safety and protection,⁷⁹ and, while extraordinary care is not demanded of him,⁸⁰ he must, because of the greater danger of his position in the portion of the highway usually devoted to the use of vehicles, ordinarily exercise a greater amount of care in observing and avoiding danger than if he were at a place used exclusively by pedestrians.⁸¹

A pedestrian walking on the right side of a highway should use due care under the circumstances for his safety and protection,⁸² and he may be required to use more care than if he walked on either shoulder thereof.⁸³ A person failing to walk on the left edge of a road may be required to use more care for his protection than is required of one walking on the left edge thereof.⁸⁴

Great or high degree of care required

(1) The obligation of pedestrian, independent of statute defining where pedestrian shall not walk, when he was in highway and before he was struck by defendant's truck was covered by his duty to exercise ordinary care under the circumstances which was a high degree of care.—Sprung v. E. I. Dupont De Nemours & Co., App., 34 N.E.2d 41, appeal dismissed 23 N.E.2d 947, 136 Ohio St. 94.

(2) Pedestrian at night, on narrow road, in outskirts of city, where numerous automobiles travel, is in danger calling for great care.—Worringen v. Zetmann, 2 La.App. 106.

(3) Where pedestrians left sidewalk, and walked on highway, they were bound to exercise great care.—McNeal v. Hettich, 172 A. 157, 113 Pa.Super. 131.

Stepping into place of danger

A pedestrian, who is walking in a place of safety on a highway, should not step directly into a place of danger in front of an oncoming automobile.—Bratvold v. Lalum, 282 N.W. 514, 68 N.D. 534.

Acts in emergency

Where an emergency situation is created through no fault on the part of a pedestrian, the fact that he may have escaped injury had he run in a different direction from the one chosen by him is of no moment.—Zuvich v. Ballay, La.App., 149 So. 281.

(2) A pedestrian walking on right side of pavement on rainy night when traffic was heavy was bound to exercise high degree of care to avoid being struck by following automobile.—Murphy v. Granz, 17 A.2d 449, 91 N.H. 244.

(3) Person dressed in dark clothing, walking along dark road with back to approaching traffic must exercise care proportionate to inherent danger.—Schmeiske v. Laubin, 145 A. 890, 109 Conn. 206.

83. N.H.—Murphy v. Granz, 17 A.2d 449, 91 N.H. 244.

84. Iowa.—Lindloff v. Duecker, 251 N.W. 698, 217 Iowa 326.

c. Reliance on Care of Motorists

A pedestrian walking along a highway usually may assume that motorists driving thereon will use due or reasonable care to avoid injuring him, but his right to rely on such care is not unlimited.

As a rule, a pedestrian lawfully walking along a highway has the right to assume that motorists driving thereon will exercise due or reasonable care to avoid injuring him,⁸⁵ since his rights and duties while walking along a highway are reciprocal with those of a motorist.⁸⁶ Thus, he may generally assume that motorists traveling on the highway will obey the law⁸⁷ and that they will keep a proper lookout to avoid injuring him.⁸⁸ He may also usually assume that the operator of a motor vehicle will not carelessly run him down, but will avoid contact with him,⁸⁹ and that he will give a signal

or warning of his approach in order to avoid an accident.⁹⁰ However, a pedestrian's right, on walking along a highway, to rely on the care of a motorist is not unlimited,⁹¹ and he may not himself omit to take the requisite amount of care for his safety and depend on the care of a motorist to save him from disaster.⁹²

With respect to contributory negligence, a person walking along a street or highway should use due or reasonable care under the circumstances to discover approaching motor vehicles, but he need not be continuously looking and listening for such purpose.

A person walking along a street or highway has a duty to use due or reasonable care under the circumstances to discover approaching motor vehicles,⁹³ and a failure so to do may constitute contrib-

Position of pedestrian

The "presumption of safety" has been held to apply to one walking on either shoulder or even on right side of pavement when visibility is good and motorists may be fairly thought to be able to see pedestrian who keeps a straight course.—Murphy v. Granz, 17 A.2d 449, 91 N.H. 244.

Whether or not he sees an automobile, a pedestrian walking along a road may rely to a reasonable extent on expectation that automobile approaching him will slow down, and that it was not be operated at a speed greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic, the use of the way, and the safety of the public.—*Sadak v. Extreme caution required

Pedestrian traveling along a highway at night must exercise extreme caution to discover approaching vehicles.—Laguens v. Masera, 3 La.App. 762.

"Proper lookout"

Law imposes on every person proceeding along a public highway or street duty of maintaining a "proper lookout" for his own safety, the term importing such lookout as a person of ordinary prudence would keep under the same or similar circumstances.—Blunt v. H. G. Berning, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 211 S.W.2d 773, error refused.

tory negligence.⁹⁴ Similarly, where a pedestrian looks, but fails to see what he should see, he may be held to be negligent.⁹⁵ While due care on the part of a pedestrian walking along a highway may demand that he frequently look and listen for approaching motor vehicles,⁹⁶ he is not bound to be continuously looking and listening for such purpose.⁹⁷

Lookout to rear. As a general rule, a pedestrian traveling along a street or highway may be required, in the exercise of reasonable care, to be alert to,⁹⁸ and look out for,⁹⁹ motor vehicles approaching from the rear, and a failure to look back under some circumstances may constitute negligence.¹ It has been held, however, that a pedestrian walking on the highway is not necessarily required in all circumstances to look back for the approach of motor vehicles² at stated intervals of time and space,³ at least where he is walking on the left side of the road,⁴ and that he is not negligent as a matter of law, or negligent per se, if he does not turn and look back⁵ constantly and repeatedly,⁶ especially where there is ample room for an automobile to pass him.⁷

A pedestrian walking on the right side of the road has been held to be under a duty to maintain a lookout to the rear for approaching motor vehicles,⁸ and he may be guilty of negligence in failing to keep such a lookout.⁹ In at least one jurisdiction the duty to maintain a lookout to the rear when walking on the right of the road exists where there are sidewalks available for use by pedestrians,¹⁰ but not where there are no sidewalks.¹¹

or paved portion of the road is not required to look back to ascertain whether motor vehicles are approaching from behind,¹² and it does not constitute negligence per se to fail to look back under such circumstances.¹³ No such duty has been held to exist whether the pedestrian is walking on the left shoulder of the road¹⁴ or on the right of the paved portion of the highway.¹⁵ It has been held, however, that one traveling on the shoulder of the right side of the road is under a duty to keep a lookout to the rear¹⁶ unless there is little vehicular traffic on the roadway so that a driver need not approach near the shoulder thereof.¹⁷

Usually a pedestrian may walk on the left side of the road, and it is safer for him to walk on such side; but he is not always obliged to walk on the left except where it is so required by regulation, in which case it may constitute negligence to fail to comply therewith.

In the absence of a statute otherwise providing, a pedestrian may walk on the left side of the road facing traffic,¹⁸ and walking on such side,¹⁹ or turning to the left out of the roadway when danger impends,²⁰ ordinarily is not negligence per se. Unless made applicable by express terms or necessary implication, a statute establishing the rule of the road to keep to the right does not apply to pedestrians.²¹ While in the absence of a statute so providing a pedestrian need not walk on the left side of a highway facing traffic,²² generally the safest place on a highway for a pedestrian is on the left side thereof,²³ and due care may require that he walk on the left side in order better to see and avoid approaching traffic.²⁴ However, walking along the right-hand side of the road has been held not to constitute negligence per se.²⁵

Under "residence district" statute

Under a statute so providing, a pedestrian may have the right to travel anywhere on a public highway in a residence district, but the exercise of his right to walk on the right-hand side of the highway instead of on the left may, under some circumstances, constitute negligence; in order that the statute may be applicable, the highway in question must be in a residence district within the meaning of the statute.—*McGough v. Who is pedestrian

(1) One leaving vehicle stalled on highway and alighting to secure gasoline was held to become a pedestrian, and subject to statute requiring him to walk on left side of road.—Keller v. Breneman, 279 P. 588, 153 Wash. 208, 67 A.L.R. 92.

(2) A person walking along a public highway pulling a small cart has been held a pedestrian within the meaning of such statute.

such a regulation may constitute negligence,²⁷ or negligence as a matter of law,²⁸ or negligence per se.²⁹ Such regulations are designed for the safety of pedestrians³⁰ and to enable them to care for themselves better than if traffic approached them from the rear,³¹ and they should be given a reasonable construction and application.³² While a pedestrian may not be permitted to determine for himself when to observe such a regulation,³³ circumstances may excuse his noncompliance therewith,³⁴ and usually he will not be required to place himself in a position of danger in order to observe the regulation.³⁵ However, it has also been held, under such a statute, that a pedestrian must walk on the left side of a highway whether it increases or diminishes the danger to himself.³⁶ A pedestrian walking on the left side of the road is not guilty of negligence in that respect where the law requires him to walk on that part of the road.³⁷

A regulation requiring a pedestrian to walk on the left side of the road has been held to apply to a way or place of whatever nature open to use by the public for travel,³⁸ and it may include a through highway traversing a street within a city,³⁹ a narrow country road,⁴⁰ or a divided highway.⁴¹ Although a statute requiring pedestrians to travel on and along the left side of the highway has been held to apply to persons walking on the shoulders of the highway,⁴² it has also been held that such a statute relates only to the paved portion of the highway.⁴³

and that such a statute applies only to pedestrians engaged in walking along and upon that portion of a public highway on which motor vehicles are accustomed to travel.⁴⁴ Under some statutory provisions, it is unlawful for a pedestrian to walk along a highway in any manner except close to the left-hand edge thereof,⁴⁵ and a statute requiring pedestrians using highways without suitable sidewalks to keep as near the extreme left side or edge thereof as reasonably possible does not forbid a pedestrian from walking on the edge of the hard surface of the road and require him to walk on the edge of the natural boundary thereof or the usable portion of the highway as generally accepted by the public.⁴⁶ A statute requiring a pedestrian to walk on the left side of a highway does not require him to walk completely off the roadway.⁴⁷

On meeting or being overtaken by a motor vehicle, a pedestrian walking on a highway may be required to step aside or out of the traveled way to allow it to pass him, but usually he need not step off the highway to do so.

On meeting or being overtaken by a motor vehicle, a pedestrian walking in the roadway may be required, in the exercise of reasonable care, to step aside or out of the traveled way to allow it to pass him,⁴⁸ and, if necessary, promptly leave the way entirely free for motor traffic.⁴⁹ If the roadway is so narrow that one or the other must go outside the road to pass, the duty so to do ordinarily is on the pedestrian, because of the greater convenience with which he can perform it.⁵⁰ As a rule, however, a pedestrian is not required to step off a highway in order to permit an automobile to pass,⁵¹ although he should use reasonable care to keep out of its way,⁵² and, where the beaten track is wide enough for a vehicle to pass without unreasonable interference, a pedestrian is not, in the absence of statutory provision, bound as a matter of law to go completely outside the roadway on observing a motor vehicle approaching thereon.⁵³ A pedestrian who knows of the approach of an automobile from his rear may be negligent in stepping in front of it,⁵⁴ or in not taking the shortest course to a place of safety.⁵⁵

Notwithstanding the driver's negligence, the negligence of a pedestrian injured as a result of an accident involving a motor vehicle may bar recovery for such injury where it proximately contributed thereto, but not otherwise.

Where a pedestrian walking along a highway is injured by a motor vehicle, the pedestrian's negligence may bar recovery for such injury if it proximately contributed thereto, notwithstanding the negligence of the motor vehicle operator.⁵⁶ So a pedestrian's violation of a statute requiring him to travel on the left-hand side of a highway may bar recovery for injuries received by him where,⁵⁷ and only where,⁵⁸ such violation proximately contributed to the injury. Under some regulations, a pedestrian walking along a highway closed for repair may be barred from recovering for injuries incurred thereon when struck by a motor vehicle used in repairing the road.⁵⁹

The violation by a pedestrian of a statute requiring one overtaken on a highway to turn to the right so as to leave free passage to his left does not in itself prevent recovery for injuries sustained by collision with a motor vehicle,⁶⁰ especially where there is room for the vehicle to pass him without interference,⁶¹ unless such violation directly contributes to his injuries.⁶² Where a pedestrian has a duty to look back for the approach of motor vehicles from the rear, his failure to do so may bar recovery for injuries received by him, provided such injuries proximately resulted therefrom.⁶³

Under statute providing that the highway commissioner may, by posting notices, close or restrict traffic over any section of a trunk line or state-aid highway for the purpose of reconstruction or repair, and that any person using highway when notices are posted shall do so at own risk, a pedestrian who ventured on road closed by notices of highway commissioner at each end of the road, and who was injured when struck by a truck of contractor engaged in performing contract for regrading and resurfacing road, was not entitled to recover for injuries from contractor, since immunity under the statute is not restricted to risk resulting from defects in surface of closed highway.—McManus v. Jarvis, supra.

a. General Rules

A pedestrian has a right to go upon a highway for the purpose of crossing it, subject to proper governmental regulation as to the places at and manner in which he may do so; but he must exercise ordinary or reasonable care to avoid injury and the failure to use such care may constitute contributory negligence barring recovery against the operator of the vehicle injuring him where such negligence is a proximate or contributing cause of the accident.

Remington, 287 N.W. 776, 136 Neb. 883.

Constructive knowledge

In order to determine whether pedestrian struck by automobile while crossing street was negligent, he must be held to have been required to act on what he should have known, as well as on what he knew.—Hizam v. Blackman, 131 A. 415, 103 Conn. 547.

Extraordinary care not required

A pedestrian, whether or not he has the right of way, is not required to use extraordinary care merely because the consequences incident to a collision between automobile and pedestrian are much more serious to pedestrian than to the automobile.—Crunkilton v. Hook, 42 A.2d 517, 185 Md. 1.

pedestrian has the right of way while crossing does not absolve him from the duty to observe the rule of due care and caution to avoid injury,⁷⁶ and, on the other hand, a pedestrian not having the right of way is not guilty of negligence merely because of that fact, if he exercises the care required of a person in that situation.⁷⁷ The rule as to the care required of a person crossing a railroad track has been held inapplicable to a pedestrian crossing a street.⁷⁸

A pedestrian crossing a street or highway has a right to rely on the exercise of due care by the operator of a motor vehicle and his compliance with rules of the road and traffic regulations,⁷⁹ and a pedestrian need not anticipate a motorist's negligence.⁸⁰ However, there is no such right of reliance after the pedestrian acquires actual or constructive notice of the negligent operation of the vehicle,⁸¹ and in any case he is not absolved from the duty of using due care under the circumstances.⁸²

Extent of road traversed. As a general rule, the duty to use due care while crossing continues throughout the entire passage from one side of the street to the other,⁸³ and the fact that the pedestrian in crossing reaches a point on the further shoulder of the highway or beyond does not excuse him from any further duty to use reasonable care;⁸⁴ but a pedestrian on the shoulder of the road need observe less caution than one on the road itself.⁸⁵

Stopping in roadway to allow passage of vehicle. It is not as a matter of law negligence for a pedestrian who has started to cross a street to stop near the curb⁸⁶ or in the middle of the street⁸⁷ and out of the apparent path of an approaching vehicle to allow it to pass ahead of him; but the fact that an injured person could have avoided the accident by stopping and allowing a motor vehicle to pass does not defeat his recovery, where under the circumstances he exercised ordinary care in proceeding.⁸⁸

Attempt to avoid injury. A pedestrian who after advancing part way into the roadway sees an automobile approaching and steps back in an attempt to avoid it, is not negligent as a matter of law;⁸⁹ but one who stops in the middle of a roadway in a place of safety, and then steps into a place of danger when an automobile is nearly upon him, is negligent.⁹⁰

Excuse for negligence. While a distracting cause might excuse a temporary want of due care on the part of a pedestrian crossing a street,⁹¹ it must be something more than mere carelessness or forgetfulness,⁹² and one who by inadvertence, forgetfulness, inattention, absent-mindedness, or carelessness places himself in a position of danger in crossing a street is negligent.⁹³

Towing and towed vehicles. A pedestrian attempting to cross a street or highway between a towing and a towed motor vehicle is not negligent as a matter of law in failing to observe the rope between the two vehicles when there is nothing to warn him of its presence or to see that the second car is not under its own power,⁹⁴ but he is required to use reasonable care to discover it,⁹⁵ and a failure to exercise such care constitutes negligence.⁹⁶

(a) General Rules

In the absence of a restrictive or prohibitory regulation, a pedestrian has the right to cross a street or highway at any point therein, and it is not of itself negligence to cross between intersections or at a place where there is no regular crossing, although in such case a greater amount of care is required than when crossing at a place regularly provided or used therefor.

In the absence of a restrictive or prohibitory regulation, a pedestrian in the exercise of reasonable care has the right to cross a street or highway at any point therein,⁹⁷ and it is, therefore, not negligence as a matter of law to cross between intersections or at a place where there is no regular crossing.⁹⁸ The pedestrian must, however, take into account the rights of vehicles and their presence in the street,⁹⁹ and exercise reasonable care¹ consistent with the circumstances² and commensurate with the danger,³ even though he may rely to some extent on the exercise of due care by a motorist.⁴ Accordingly, a greater amount of care usually is demanded of a pedestrian crossing between intersections than of one crossing at a place regularly provided or used therefor,⁵ although this rule does not apply to one crossing a highway where no street intersections or crossings exist.⁶

The obligation on the part of a pedestrian crossing a street to make reasonable use of his senses to discover and avoid danger from approaching motor vehicles, discussed generally infra § 471, requires that he maintain a proper lookout when crossing a street between intersections,⁷ especially where the street is a main traveled one in a village or city,⁸ and failure to keep such a lookout may constitute negligence.⁹ Although it has been held that the pedestrian need not maintain a constant vigilance while crossing,¹⁰ it has also been held that he must continue to be watchful during all the time he is crossing,¹¹ and that his duty to keep a lookout cannot be said, as a matter of law, to be fully performed by merely looking in both directions as he leaves the curb or enters the roadway,¹² especially where the observation was made so long prior to his entry of the zone of danger as to be ineffective.¹³ A pedestrian crossing between intersections is charged with seeing what he could and should have seen,¹⁴ and if he looks and fails to see an approaching vehicle which is in plain view he may be guilty of negligence.¹⁵

(b) Governmental Regulations

A violation of a regulation prohibiting a pedestrian from crossing a street at a place other than an intersection or a regular crossing may constitute negligence, but a regulation merely requiring the pedestrian to yield the right of way in crossing at such a place does not prohibit a crossing although the pedestrian may be obliged to exercise a greater amount of care than when crossing at a point where he has the right of way.

Under some governmental regulations, a pedestrian is prohibited from crossing a street between intersections or at a point where there is no regular crossing,¹⁶ and, where a pedestrian violates such a regulation and is injured by a motor vehicle, such violation may be invoked as a defense to a suit by the pedestrian.¹⁷ Some decisions have held that noncompliance with such a regulation is not of itself contributory negligence,¹⁸ although it may constitute prima facie negligence,¹⁹ or evidence of negligence,²⁰ but other decisions have considered such noncompliance to constitute negligence per se.²¹ It has been held that a pedestrian crossing a street in violation of such a regulation is under a duty to keep a constant lookout for his own safety in all directions of anticipated danger, and is guilty of negligence if he fails to do so.²²

Regulations as to right of way. Under regulations giving to vehicles the right of way over pedestrians between regular crossings or street intersections, or requiring a pedestrian to yield the right of way at such a place to a motor vehicle, a pedestrian is not prohibited from crossing between such crossings or intersections,²³ and it is not as a matter of law negligence so to do.²⁴ Although under such regulations the motor vehicle does not have an absolute right of way regardless of the rights of the pedestrian, as discussed supra § 389, the pedestrian ordinarily is obliged to yield the right of way²⁵ and to maintain such a lookout as is reasonably necessary to enable him to yield the right of way,²⁶ even though the crossing constitutes a practical and usual method of reaching vehicles parked in the center of the street.²⁷ The duty to yield the right of way is not lessened by the fact that the pedestrian has reached the center of the street.²⁸ A violation of the regulation may constitute negligence.²⁹

Such regulations are to be construed reasonably,³⁰ and the pedestrian's right yields to that of the vehicle only when the necessity arises³¹ To yield the right of way means only that when the course of an automobile along a highway meets with that of a pedestrian who seeks to cross at a point other than an intersection or designated crossing, under circumstances which render a collision likely, the pedestrian must stop and permit the motorist to pass ahead of him.³² It does not mean that the pedestrian must yield the entire street,³³ and he is only required to yield the right of way to the particular lane of travel in which the motorist is traveling,³⁴ as he may assume that the motorist will obey the law, as by driving on the proper side of the street.³⁵

A pedestrian who crosses at a place where he is obliged by regulation to yield the right of way must exercise reasonable care³⁶ commensurate with his position,³⁷ and the amount of care required is usually greater than at crossings or intersections where pedestrians have the right of way.³⁸ In determining whether the pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence the amount of traffic and all other circumstances must be considered,³⁹ including the fact that at the crossing the pedestrian's right to use the street is subordinate to that of the motorist.⁴⁰ Although the statutory duty of the pedestrian to yield the right of way may call for a higher degree of care, the question is still whether the required care has been exercised,⁴¹ and not merely whether the right of way has been yielded.⁴²

(2) At Intersections and Public Crossings

- (a) In general
- (b) Right of way
- (c) Lookout
- (d) Reliance on care of motorist

(a) In General

A pedestrian crossing a street at an intersection or public crossing has a right equal to that of drivers of motor vehicles to the use of the crossing, but he may not exercise that right recklessly and should exercise reasonable care for his own safety.

A pedestrian crossing a street at an intersection or public crossing is not required as a matter of law to give way to motor vehicles,⁴³ and his right to the use of the crossing is equal and not subordinate to that of the drivers of motor vehicles.⁴⁴ However, the pedestrian may not exercise that right recklessly⁴⁵ and he is required to exercise reasonable care for his own safety.⁴⁶ He is bound to anticipate the presence of vehicles in the roadway⁴⁷ and to use reasonable prudence to avoid placing himself in such a position that one operating a motor vehicle with ordinary care may be unable to avoid injuring him.⁴⁸

Where the pedestrian's behavior and conduct under the circumstances are those of an ordinarily and reasonably prudent person, he is not negligent.⁴⁹ If he is confronted with an emergency which he did not create, he is not required to exercise the best judgment in his choice of a method to avoid injury,⁵⁰ and, therefore, conduct which under other circumstances would be negligent may not amount to contributory negligence.⁵¹ So a pedestrian is not required to remain in a safety lane if ordinary prudence dictates that removal therefrom will avoid danger.⁵² The "sudden emergency" rule is applicable only with respect to action taken in an emergency,⁵³ where the emergency

Crossing behind standing vehicle. A pedestrian is not negligent as a matter of law in attempting to cross a street or highway at a regular crossing place behind a standing motor vehicle, where there is nothing to warn him of any danger in so doing;⁵⁵ but, in view of his duty to exercise reasonable care for his own safety and protection, he may be negligent under the circumstances,⁵⁶ as where he sees a traffic officer signal the driver of the automobile to move backward as he is about to cross.⁵⁷

(b) Right of Way

Whether a pedestrian has the right of way in crossing at an intersection or public crossing is material in determining the question of his contributory negligence, and, while some regulations grant him the right of way, such right is not an absolute one and does not impair the duty of the pedestrian to exercise ordinary care.

In determining the question of contributory negligence of a pedestrian injured by a motor vehicle

while crossing at an intersection or public crossing, whether the pedestrian or the automobile had the right of way must be considered.⁵⁸ In the absence of a governmental regulation conferring a right of way, a pedestrian has no right of way over vehicles at crossings,⁵⁹ although he is entitled to cross first if he reaches a crossing in advance of an approaching automobile,⁶⁰ and, where one has without negligence committed himself to a public crossing, he has a right to proceed superior to that of a vehicle thereafter approaching.⁶¹

Under some regulations pedestrians are accorded the right of way over vehicles at street intersections and public crossings.⁶² These regulations apply only when a pedestrian and a vehicle approach a crossing at the same time or in such manner that if both continue on their respective courses there is danger of collision,⁶³ and they entitle the pedestrian in such case to the first use of the crossing.⁶⁴ Such a regulation confers only a relative⁶⁵ or preferential⁶⁶ right of way, and not an absolute one,⁶⁷

Private way intersection

A pedestrian, struck by automobile while crossing street from corner of intersection of private way with such street, was not in crosswalk within regulation.—Cihal v. Carver, 79 N.E. 2d 82, 334 Ill.App. 234.

Absence of crosswalk at highway intersection

Under statute requiring operator of vehicle to yield right of way to pedestrian crossing highway within marked or unmarked crosswalk and defining "unmarked crosswalk" as portion of highway within prolongation of curb and property line, there was no "unmarked crosswalk" and pedestrian was required to yield right of way at intersection of state trunk and county trunk highways, where there was no curb and no sidewalk or path of which there could be a continuation.—Burke v. and in no way impairs the duty of the pedestrian to exercise ordinary care for his own safety.⁶⁸ Such a right of way must be exercised in a lawful manner and as a reasonably prudent person would exercise it,⁶⁹ and the pedestrian may not obstruct the crossing to the exclusion of others or to the interruption of street traffic.⁷⁰

In order to entitle one to the protection of a regulation giving pedestrians the right of way at public crossings, it is not necessary that he be exactly on the crossing,⁷¹ although he must use the defined or accustomed way to cross the street.⁷² When it is not shown that the pedestrian was using a regular crossing at the time of his injury, the regulation granting him the right of way does not apply,⁷³ and, where the pedestrian deviates from a crosswalk while crossing the street to a point where a motorist would not reasonably anticipate his presence, he must use the highest degree of care.⁷⁴

Under regulations granting a right of way to pedestrians crossing streets at an intersection or regular crossing, the right of way extends over the entire width of the street,⁷⁵ but the pedestrian does not have exclusive control of the entire area of the intersection,⁷⁶ and he is not entitled to a right of way everywhere within the four boundaries of the intersection.⁷⁷ Under some provisions the right of way is not limited to the exact line at which one street crosses another,⁷⁸ but includes any point close to such line where a person acting reasonably and prudently may properly step for the purpose of crossing the street.⁷⁹ Under other provisions, however, the right of way is limited to the confines of the highway embraced within the boundaries of the sidewalk lines if extended⁸⁰ or to the space between the curb and the building line as projected across the intersecting street.⁸¹

zone of safety, which is center of street, at which place pedestrian must look to right for approaching traffic, and pedestrian's attempt to assert his statutory right of way in face of traffic approaching dangerously close from the right would be contributory negligence.—Thornton v. (c) Lookout

Although a pedestrian crossing a street at an intersection or designated crossing is not under an imperative duty to keep a lookout for approaching vehicles, the duty to exercise reasonable care may require him under the circumstances to look and listen, and a failure so to do may constitute negligence.

A pedestrian crossing a street at an intersection or public crossing is not under an imperative duty in all circumstances to keep a lookout for the approach of motor vehicles,⁸² and, therefore, it is not of itself contributory negligence in every case to fail to look and listen for such vehicles.⁸³ However, under the general rule requiring a pedestrian crossing a street or highway to exercise reasonable care for his own safety, discussed supra subdivision a of this section, and to stop, look and listen when necessary, discussed infra § 471, the circumstances may be such as to impose the duty to maintain a reasonable lookout,⁸⁴ in which case a failure so to do may, under the circumstances, constitute negligence,⁸⁵ notwithstanding the pedestrian may have the right of way.⁸⁶ Thus, a pedestrian crossing a street at an intersection or designated crossing who, without looking, steps suddenly into the path of an oncoming motor vehicle⁸⁷ or into the side of a passing automobile⁸⁸ has been held guilty of negligence.

Since a duty to look ordinarily implies a duty to see that which is in plain sight, discussed generally supra § 458, a pedestrian crossing a street at an intersection or designated crossing who looks and fails to see a motor vehicle which is in plain sight may be guilty of negligence.⁸⁹ However, a pedestrian who looks is not guilty of negligence in failing to see a motor vehicle, if reasonable use of the powers of observation do not disclose its presence,⁹⁰ as where a vehicle is traveling without lights at a time when lights are required by law or are reasonably necessary⁹¹ or is being operated at an excessive speed.⁹²

Standard of care

In determining whether pedestrian's failure to look for approaching automobiles while he was crossing street at intersection was contributory negligence, fact that pedestrian's companions had stopped in street to let vehicle pass was not the standard by which the rights and duties of the parties were to be measured, but they were to be determined by care required of an ordinarily prudent man.—Tri-State Transit Co. of Louisiana v. Assumption of ability to complete crossing

Pedestrian might assume he could reach other side of street before automobile, traveling at legal rate of speed, could reach him, where it was not within his vision.—Arnell v. Gordon, 207 N.W. 826, 234 Mich. 140.

Dependent on circumstances

Whether pedestrian who looked in both directions before leaving sidewalk to cross intersecting street and looked again when entering upon traveled way was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to observe approaching automobile was dependent on whether he exercised reasonable care under all the circumstances.—Skovronski v. Genovese, 200 A. 575, 124 Conn. 482.

tersection, he must look at least in those directions from which danger may reasonably be apprehended,⁹³ and, on reaching the center of the street or a point reasonably outside the zone of danger from vehicles coming from one direction, it ordinarily becomes his duty to look for vehicles coming in the opposite direction.⁹⁴ The pedestrian crossing the intersection is not necessarily negligent because he does not look behind him for approaching motor vehicles, in the absence of warning or notice of the impending danger,⁹⁵ as where he is struck by an automobile which approaches from the rear and turns into the intersecting street over the crossing on which he is proceeding.⁹⁶ However, a pedestrian crossing an intersection must make some effort to see whether vehicles traveling in the same direction are about to turn across his path,⁹⁷ and whether the precautions taken constitute ordinary care must be determined from the particular circumstances.⁹⁸

Duty to look again or continue to look. A pedestrian crossing a street at an intersection or designated crossing who has looked for approaching vehicles is not negligent as a matter of law in failing to look again⁹⁹ or to continue to look therefor.¹ However, in view of the duty to exercise reasonable care, circumstances may make the failure so to do negligence.²

(d) Reliance on Care of Motorist

A pedestrian crossing a street at an intersection or designated crossing has the right to assume, and to act on such assumption, in the absence of knowledge or notice to the contrary, that a motorist will use reasonable care to avoid injuring him and will comply with traffic regulations.

A pedestrian crossing a street at an intersection or designated crossing has the right to assume, in the absence of knowledge or notice to the contrary, that motorists will use reasonable care to avoid injuring him,³ and ordinarily he is not guilty of contributory negligence in acting on such an assumption⁴ and in failing to anticipate a motorist's negligence.⁵ However, a pedestrian with knowledge or notice to the contrary has no right to engage in such an assumption,⁶ but it is his duty to look out for his own safety.⁷

Ordinarily a pedestrian crossing at an intersection may assume, and act on such assumption, that a motorist will exercise proper caution in approaching the crossing,⁸ and that he will obey traffic regulations,⁹ as with respect to speed,¹⁰ or slowing down on approaching pedestrians,¹¹ or yielding the right of way.¹² A pedestrian stepping into the street is not to be charged as a matter of law with the responsibility of anticipating that a vehicle would be run against the curb near to, and almost among, standing pedestrians;¹³ and, when one is already crossing a street¹⁴ or is far enough out from the curb so that an approaching car has room to pass behind him,¹⁵ he is not negligent in failing to anticipate a collision, as he is entitled to assume that the motorist will use such area and avoid strik-

c. Crossing in Front of Approaching Vehicle

Whether a pedestrian is guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to cross a street or highway in front of an approaching automobile depends on all the circumstances under which he acts, and on whether he exercises care commensurate with the danger reasonably to be anticipated.

Whether a pedestrian is guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to cross a street or highway in front of an approaching automobile depends on all the circumstances under which he acts,¹⁷ including the time, place, and conditions of traffic,¹⁸ and on whether he exercises care commensurate with the danger reasonably to be anticipated.¹⁹ A pedestrian about to cross a street or highway who sees a motor vehicle approaching him is not as a matter of law guilty of negligence in attempting to cross in front of it when he reasonably believes that he has time to do so with safety,²⁰ or in omitting

Assumption of risk

One who voluntarily attempts to pass in front of an approaching vehicle, when it is dangerously near, assumes the risk.—Borits v. Tarapchak, 12 A.2d 910, 338 Pa. 289.

Imminent danger

A pedestrian who is aware of approach of a vehicle about to cross an intersection in a manner or under such circumstances as to cause a reasonable person to perceive that danger is imminent, and who persists in an onward course, is guilty of negligence as matter of law.—Isaacs v. City and County of San Francisco, 167 P.2d 221, 73 Cal.App.2d 621.

Place of safety

A pedestrian in the street at a place of safety who sees and knows of the approach of an automobile has the duty of exercising ordinary care to avoid collision by remaining outside the path of the automobile if it be in close proximity or so regulate his speed in crossing as to avoid contact with automobile.—Hagstrom v. Limbeck, 130 P.2d 895, 15 Wash.2d 399.

may be negligent if he deliberately steps, walks, or runs into the path of an approaching automobile in close proximity to him,²⁹ or starts across the street when he knows that a motor vehicle is approaching without looking to see where it then is.³⁰ He may not close his eyes to the threatened danger³¹ or rely solely on the presumption that the driver will exercise due care and prudence.³² In determining whether or not it is safe to proceed, it is not the duty of a pedestrian to make mathematical calculations based on distances and relative speeds, but only to exercise ordinary care;³³ and in this connection it has been said to be common knowledge that it is difficult to judge at night the speed or distance away of an approaching automobile by observing its lights.³⁴

d. Crossing Diagonally

In the absence of a governmental regulation prohibiting it, a pedestrian is not necessarily negligent in crossing a street or intersection diagonally, but he must exercise caution and make reasonable use of his senses to discover impending danger, and failure to use such care may render him negligent in fact, under the circumstances of the particular case.

In the absence of a statute or ordinance prohibiting it, a pedestrian who undertakes to cross a street³⁵ or intersection³⁶ diagonally is not negligent as a matter of law, especially where there is room for motor vehicles to pass on either side of him.³⁷ In this respect he may rely to some extent on the assumption that persons driving upon the street will obey the law³⁸ and will exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring him.³⁹ However, in view of the duty resting on a pedestrian crossing the highway to exercise care for his own safety and protection commensurate with the danger involved, discussed supra subdivision a of this section, a greater amount of care is required of a pedestrian crossing diagonally than of one crossing directly at a regular crosswalk or intersection,⁴⁰ and he may be negligent in fact, under the circumstances of the particular case.⁴¹

A pedestrian crossing diagonally must make reasonable use of his senses to discover impending danger,⁴² and usually he must look in the direction from which motor vehicles may be expected to come before entering a lane of travel.⁴³ Thus one who, without looking for approaching vehicles, hurries diagonally across a street between intersections,⁴⁴ or who attempts to cross an intersection diagonally at a time when mist or rain obscures his vision,⁴⁵ may be guilty of negligence.

Duty to look back. A pedestrian crossing a street diagonally is not necessarily guilty of negligence because of his failure to turn and look back for approaching automobiles,⁴⁶ especially after he has traversed that portion of the street on which vehicles might be expected to come from behind him.⁴⁷ While he must be alert,⁴⁸ whether or not he is negligent in not turning and looking back depends on the circumstances of the particular case.⁴⁹

pedestrian, which precludes recovery for an injury to which it contributes,⁵⁰ but it has also been held that such violation is not negligence per se, but only prima facie evidence thereof,⁵¹ which may be rebutted by a showing that the failure to cross in a direct line was due to an obstruction in the street.⁵² An ordinance requiring pedestrians crossing a street at an intersection to cross at right angles does not apply to one crossing between intersections.⁵³

e. Obstruction of View

A pedestrian crossing or about to cross a street or highway when his view of an approaching motor vehicle is obstructed is usually required to exercise a greater degree of care than would otherwise be necessary, and he is negligent if he fails to take proper precautions to discover and observe the approach of such vehicle before placing himself in a position of danger.

Under the rule requiring a pedestrian crossing the highway to use reasonable care for his own safety and protection, discussed supra subdivision a of this section, a pedestrian crossing or about to cross a street or highway when his view of an approaching motor vehicle is obstructed is usually required to exercise a greater amount of care than would otherwise be necessary,⁵⁴ and is negligent if he fails to take proper precautions to discover and observe the approach of such vehicle before placing himself in a position of danger.⁵⁵ Thus, a pedestrian may be guilty of contributory negligence where he steps into the path of an approaching automobile from between vehicles parked at the curb⁶⁶ or from behind a streetcar⁶⁷ or other vehicle.⁶⁸ Likewise, one who crosses in front of a standing⁶⁹ or moving⁶⁰ streetcar or other vehicle⁶¹ which prevents him from seeing an automobile passing it from the rear may be guilty of contributory negligence.

Insufficient observation

Pedestrian crossing concrete state highway carrying heavy fast-moving traffic, knowing of its danger, was negligent, as a matter of law, in making no observation in one direc-

Where, on the other hand, a pedestrian crosses a street at a public crossing in front of a car stopped to permit him to proceed, it has been held that he is not as a matter of law guilty of negligence in failing to see or to avoid a motor vehicle which approaches from the rear of the standing automobile and passes around it.⁶² It has also been held that it is not negligence as a matter of law for a pedestrian to attempt to cross a street where his view is obstructed by reason of a car having been left in the center of the street in violation of a governmental regulation.⁶³ The obligation to use reasonable care does not impose on the pedestrian the duty to anticipate that a motor vehicle will emerge from a concealed position at unlawful speed⁶⁴ or at a place prohibited by law.⁶⁵ So, where his view is obstructed, he is not negligent as a matter of law in failing to see an automobile passing too close to a streetcar,⁶⁶ passing a vehicle on the wrong side,⁶⁷ or traveling on the wrong side of the street,⁶⁸ or in a safety zone, where vehicular traffic is prohibited.⁶⁹ Similarly, one who steps behind a parked automobile to look for approaching traffic before crossing a street is not negligent as a matter of law when struck by a motor vehicle driven very close to the parked car.⁷⁰

Smoke, fog, rain, or snow. A pedestrian crossing the highway who travels through or near to a dense cloud of smoke which prevents him from seeing approaching traffic may be guilty of contributory negligence.⁷¹ However, a pedestrian is not always negligent in crossing a street when his vision is obscured by atmospheric conditions, if he exercises due care for his own safety and for the rights of other users of the highway,⁷² as where he crosses at night in a fog⁷³ or during a rain.⁷⁴

f. Compliance with, or Violation of, Traffic Signal

- (1) In general
- (2) Duty to look
- (3) Reliance on care of motorist

(1) In General

A pedestrian crossing a street or highway at a point controlled by traffic officers or signals is bound to exercise ordinary care for his own safety with respect to approaching vehicles and to obey the signals, and, while a favorable signal may entitle him to the right of way in crossing, he must still use reasonable care.

tion devices is bound to exercise ordinary care for his own safety to avoid being charged with contributory negligence with respect to an injury inflicted by a motor vehicle,⁷⁵ and the existence of a traffic signal and its character are proper elements to be considered in determining whether the pedestrian's conduct constitutes negligence.⁷⁶ It is ordinarily the duty of a pedestrian to obey traffic signals in crossing,⁷⁷ and if he attempts to cross a street or highway at an intersection where the movement of traffic is controlled by signal or by a traffic officer he may be negligent in so doing when traffic is being permitted to move along the street over which he crosses.⁷⁸ It has been held, however, that crossing in disregard of the right of way afforded by a traffic signal does not constitute negligence under any and all circumstances,⁷⁹ and that crossing against a signal in violation of regulations does not amount to negligence as a matter of law,⁸⁰ although it is a circumstance which commands vigilance on the part of the pedestrian.⁸¹ Thus a pedestrian who attempts to filter through traffic moving on the right of way must accommodate his movements to those of the vehicles, must yield the right of way to them, and cross only as the traffic affords an opportunity to do so in subordination to the right given the vehicles.⁸²

Generally, a pedestrian in crossing may rely to a considerable extent, although not exclusively, on a favorable traffic signal⁸³ or signal of a traffic officer.⁸⁴ The pedestrian also has the right to enter an intersection and to proceed across it when a traffic signal turns in his favor,⁸⁵ and one who starts across a street in accordance with traffic signals and commits himself to the crossing usually has a superior right of way against a vehicle thereafter approaching⁸⁶ until he has reached the opposite curb.⁸⁷ Where a pedestrian crossing a street in accordance with a traffic signal was struck by a vehicle turning into the intersection also in accordance

A statute providing the right of way for pedestrians at regular crossings of street intersections, except where the movement of traffic is regulated by traffic officers or directive devices, has been construed as not depriving pedestrians of the right of way at intersections where traffic is regulated, but rather to subject them to the regulation of traffic devices at street intersections.—Lott v. De Luxe Cab Co., 299 P. 303, 136 Or. 349.

87. Ohio.—Juergens v. Bell Distributing, 21 N.E.2d 90, 135 Ohio St. 335.

Effect of regulation

Under regulation giving pedestrian entering crosswalk with green or go electric signal right of way over vehicles until he has reached opposite curb, question of pedestrian's contributory negligence includes not only conduct of pedestrian in crossing crosswalk, but also extent of right of way granted by regulation.—Juergens v. Bell Distributing, supra.

with the signal, the pedestrian's right to cross has been held at least equal to the right of the motorist to turn at the intersection when the signal changed.⁸⁸

The fact that the traffic signal is set against traffic on the street over which the pedestrian is crossing does not, however, relieve him from the duty to exercise ordinary care,⁸⁹ or, unless so provided by statute or ordinance,⁹⁰ give him an absolute right to proceed or an absolute right of way over an approaching motor vehicle⁹¹ for the full distance of the crossing.⁹² Whatever right of way he has he acquires not alone from the traffic signal or the direction of the traffic officer, but from that in connection with other circumstances,⁹³ such as that the danger of crossing is lessened at such time and that he has actually accepted the invitation to cross and is, when approached by an automobile, in such position that the driver thereof should by the exercise of reasonable care have known of his peril in time to avoid striking him.⁹⁴ Notwithstanding the pedestrian's right of way afforded by the signal, if he sees or should have seen a vehicle approaching in disregard of his rights, he may be guilty of negligence in stepping into the path of the vehicle.⁹⁵ So a pedestrian who steps directly in front of a moving automobile without in any way indicating his intention to the operator thereof in time to permit him to avoid a collision is negligent, even though he is crossing in the direction in which the traffic signal permits traffic to proceed, and the automobile is turning from the street in which traffic is moving into the street in which traffic is stopped.⁹⁶

When the traffic signal changes while a pedestrian is rightfully in the act of crossing the street or highway, ordinarily he has the right of way until the opposite curb is reached;⁹⁷ and similarly, under a regulation providing that at an intersection where a traffic officer is on duty pedestrians shall cross with released traffic and not otherwise, a pedestrian who starts across at such place with traffic is entitled to the right of way over vehicles crossing his course, although the signal is changed to release such vehicles before he has completed his crossing.⁹⁸ However, such a pedestrian has no absolute protection to complete the crossing,⁹⁹ and due care under the circumstances must be exercised,¹ although he is bound to act only as a reasonably prudent man in endeavoring to extricate himself from the danger of his position.²

(2) Duty to Look

A pedestrian crossing a street or highway at or near a point controlled by a traffic signal is generally bound to keep a lookout for approaching vehicles, and ordinarily he is not relieved of such duty by the fact that the signal is in his favor.

near a point controlled by a traffic signal is generally bound to keep a lookout for approaching vehicles,³ at least where the traffic signal is not in his favor and gives him no right to cross.⁴ Ordinarily he is not relieved of the duty to look by the facts that the signal is set against traffic on the street over which he is crossing or is about to cross⁵ and that a regulation gives the right of way to a pedestrian who has started to cross an intersection on a favorable signal.⁶

A person who starts across a street in accordance with traffic signals has a duty to look to the right and to the left for approaching traffic⁷ and to watch out for vehicles already within the intersection;⁸ but he is under no extreme duty, as a matter of law, to keep a lookout to the rear⁹ or to look up the street beyond the intersection to discover approaching automobiles,¹⁰ nor is it ordinarily necessary for him to continue to look in a particular direction.¹¹ However, a pedestrian who steps into the highway after having observed a traffic signal set against him is required to look and to continue to look while crossing.¹² A pedestrian starting to cross under a favorable signal must observe a change, if any, in the signal,¹³ and, when a signal changes while he is rightfully in the act of crossing, a failure to exercise due care to observe released traffic may constitute negligence.¹⁴

(3) Reliance on Care of Motorist

In the absence of notice or knowledge to the contrary, a pedestrian crossing a street or highway on a favorable traffic signal has a right to assume that operators of approaching vehicles will obey the law and will not disregard the signal.

In the absence of notice or knowledge to the contrary,¹⁵ a pedestrian crossing a street or highway on a favorable signal has a right to assume that operators of approaching vehicles will obey the law¹⁶ and will observe and not disregard the signal,¹⁷ and he is not required to anticipate that a motorist will not comply with the traffic signal.¹⁸ Such a person may properly assume that due precautions for his safety will be taken,¹⁹ such as that approaching vehicles will be operated at a reasonable rate of speed,²⁰ that a reasonably careful lookout for him will be kept,²¹ and that the vehicle will be under

§ 471. — Duty to Stop, Look, and Listen

- a. In general
- b. Extent of duty
- c. Failure to see or hear approaching vehicle

a. In General

Although a pedestrian about to cross a public street or highway is not under an absolute duty to stop, look, and listen for approaching motor vehicles, in certain circumstances such precautions must be taken and the failure to do so may constitute negligence or negligence per se.

There is no imperative rule requiring a pedestrian about to cross a public street or highway to stop, or to look and listen for approaching motor vehicles under penalty of being deemed negligent as a matter of law on omission thereof,²⁶ and whether or not a failure so to do is negligence is ordinarily a question of fact under the circumstances, as discussed infra § 527. However, under the rule discussed supra § 468 b requiring pedestrians to exercise reasonable care for their own safety and in so doing to make reasonable use of their faculties and intelligence to discover impending danger, a pedestrian crossing a street or highway ordinarily is obliged to make reasonable use of his senses to avoid injury,²⁷ and, under certain circumstances, the duty may exist to stop²⁸ and look²⁹ for approaching vehicles, and, likewise the duty may exist to listen³⁰ for approaching motor vehicles.

The failure of a pedestrian crossing a street or highway to stop, look, and listen when necessary has been variously held to constitute negligence,³¹ negligence per se,³² or merely evidence of negligence.³³ The violation of a regulation requiring a pedestrian to look in both directions before stepping into or on a public road or highway may constitute negligence per se,³⁴ and the effect of a failure to comply with the regulation does not depend on whether the regulation is usually obeyed or violated,³⁵ or on whether the pedestrian did or did not intend to violate the regulation.³⁶ In accordance with the foregoing rules, it has been held that a pedestrian may be guilty of contributory negligence where, without looking, he steps suddenly into a roadway,³⁷ or crosses with his head down,³⁸ or reading a newspaper,³⁹ or with an umbrella so held as to cut off his vision,⁴⁰ or where, having advanced into the traveled portion of a street, he steps back into the path of a motor vehicle without observing whether the way is clear.⁴¹

Reliance on due care of motorist. In accordance with the rule as to the right of a pedestrian crossing a street or highway to rely on the exercise of due care by motor vehicles using the highway, discussed generally supra § 459, the right to presume that the operators of such vehicles will comply with the law may be considered in determining whether the failure of a pedestrian to look and listen was negligence under the circumstances.⁴² A pedestrian who crosses a busy street without looking cannot assume that a motorist will not be negligent, where the pedestrian by looking would have discovered the negligence in time to avoid injury.⁴³

b. Extent of Duty

(1) In general

(2) Duty to look again or continue to look

(1) In General

A pedestrian's duty to look on crossing a street or highway arises at the curb or at such time and place as will inform him of traffic conditions, and he must look in an effective manner in the directions from which danger may be anticipated.

The duty of a pedestrian, in the exercise of reasonable care, to stop, look, and listen on crossing a street or highway, ordinarily arises at the curb when he is about to step into the traveled portion of the street,⁴⁴ or at such time and place as will reasonably be of some benefit in protecting him and informing him of traffic conditions;⁴⁵ but it has been held that he is not required to look at some precisely fixed moment for a particular danger before entering on the highway.⁴⁶ The pedestrian crossing a street or highway is required to make a proper and efficient observation⁴⁷ and look in such a manner that looking will be effective,⁴⁸ but his observation need not extend beyond the distance within which vehicles moving at a lawful speed will endanger him.⁴⁹

Direction of observation. Under the duty to exercise reasonable care in observing approaching vehicles, the pedestrian is required to look in the directions of anticipated danger,⁵⁰ but he is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in not keeping a lookout in a direction where automobiles are not to be anticipated.⁵¹ The pedestrian may be under a duty to look both to the left and the right before walking into the street,⁵² and, on reaching the center of the street or a point reasonably outside the zone of danger from vehicles coming from one direction, it ordinarily becomes his duty, in the exercise of due care, to look for automobiles coming in the opposite stream of traffic.⁵³

While a pedestrian is especially required to exercise care with reference to vehicles traveling forward on the right side of the street, he is not relieved from the duty of using ordinary care to protect himself against automobiles which may be backing into a parking place,⁵⁴ and he is guilty of negligence in going into the street to the rear of a vehicle which is backing up, when he should have discovered its movement and direction.⁵⁵ However, a pedestrian who has observed a motor vehicle passing is not guilty of negligence per se in not continuing to watch it to see that it does not reverse its motion and back against him⁵⁶ or suddenly turn about and return in the opposite direction.⁵⁷

A pedestrian crossing a street or highway is not guilty of negligence as a matter of law in failing to observe a motor vehicle traveling upon the wrong side of the roadway,⁵⁸ or swerving to the wrong side thereof,⁵⁹ when he has received no warning of the approaching vehicle⁶⁰ and has no reason to anticipate injury therefrom.⁶¹ Under the circumstances, however, the pedestrian may be negligent in failing to see the vehicle traveling on the wrong side of the street,⁶² and he is not relieved of the duty to anticipate the approach of a motor vehicle which is rightfully using the left-hand side of the street while overtaking and passing another vehicle headed in the same direction.⁶³

(2) Duty to Look Again or Continue to Look

A pedestrian crossing a street or highway ordinarily is not required to exercise constant vigilance and he is not necessarily negligent in failing to look a second time after having looked and seen no vehicles approaching or in failing to look continuously, but under some circumstances the failure to look again or to continue to look may constitute negligence.

A pedestrian crossing or about to cross a street or highway is not required to exercise constant vigilance,⁶⁴ nor does he have the burden of looking any certain number of times before crossing.⁶⁵ Accordingly, a pedestrian who has looked for approaching motor vehicles and seen none is not necessarily and as a matter of law negligent in failing to look a second time⁶⁶ or to continue to look therefor.⁶⁷ He need not look in all directions at all times,⁶⁸ and is not necessarily negligent because he does not look in a particular direction at a given moment.⁶⁹

The duty to exercise reasonable care under the circumstances may, however, in some situations, require a pedestrian, crossing or about to cross a street or highway, who has looked for vehicles and seen none to look again⁷⁰ or to continue looking,⁷¹ and the omission so to do may constitute negligence.⁷² Thus, a pedestrian who looked and saw no automobiles approaching at the time he started into a roadway has been held guilty of negligence in failing to look during his crossing for a car which he could not have seen from the curb,⁷³ in proceeding without observing further when he saw a light through an umbrella which he held in such manner as partially to obscure his vision,⁷⁴ or in walking a considerable distance over a much-traveled street without again looking;⁷⁵ and one who has looked once in the direction from which an automobile would naturally be expected to come and then looked in the opposite direction and stepped into the street without further observation may be negligent in so doing.⁷⁶

c. Failure to See or Hear Approaching Vehicle

Generally, a pedestrian crossing a street or highway will be charged with having seen and heard that which could and should have been seen and heard, but the failure to see or hear an approaching vehicle does not always constitute negligence.

A pedestrian crossing a street or highway will be charged with having seen and heard that which he could and should have seen and heard, and this is true whether he did look and listen⁷⁷ or whether he failed to look and listen,⁷⁸ and one cannot be credited who says he looked and did not see an automobile, which, if he had looked, he in the nature of things must have seen.⁷⁹ Accordingly, the pedestrian's failure to see a vehicle in plain view and to avoid injury therefrom may constitute negligence.⁸⁰ However, a pedestrian about to cross a street or highway who has looked and listened with reasonable care for approaching motor vehicles is not as a matter of law negligent in all cases in failing to see or hear an approaching automobile,⁸¹ and under such circumstances he is not necessarily negligent in proceeding to cross,⁸² in view of his right to assume that an operator of a motor vehicle will drive at a reasonable speed and with due care,⁸³ especially after he has reached a point at which there is adequate room for passage of an automobile on either side of him.⁸⁴

A pedestrian who sees that no vehicle is approaching within the distance which would be covered by a vehicle operated at a lawful rate of speed during the time the pedestrian is crossing is not negligent as a matter of law in failing to see an automobile which approaches at excessive speed;⁸⁵ nor is he negligent per se in failing to observe a motor vehicle without lights,⁸⁶ or with its lights dimmed⁸⁷ or obscured,⁸⁸ as by a brightly lighted streetcar around which it is passing,⁸⁹ even though there is nothing to distract his attention from it.⁹⁰

a. In General

Ordinarily, a pedestrian is not negligent as a matter of law in sitting or standing in the street or highway, but such a person is required to use ordinary or reasonable care for his own safety and protection.

Unless prohibited from so doing by a statute or municipal ordinance, a person is not negligent as a matter of law in sitting or standing in the street or highway,⁹¹ as when he is inspecting a vehicle to discover the cause of trouble⁹² or to remedy it,⁹³ or while conversing with another person.⁹⁴ Also, it does not constitute negligence as a matter of law for a person to stand on the highway for the purpose of warning travelers of the presence of a disabled vehicle⁹⁵ or for the purpose of aiding in

Failure to leave sufficient clearance

Where lights on plaintiff's truck suddenly went out at night, parking of truck on paved portion of highway without leaving sufficient clearance for approaching traffic did not render plaintiff, who was struck by truck approaching from rear while the removal of an injured animal.⁹⁶ Nevertheless, a pedestrian may not, with impunity, stand on a highway in the face of a known approaching vehicle,⁹⁷ but, like every other user of the highway, he is required to use ordinary or reasonable care for his own safety and protection,⁹⁸ or that degree of care which a reasonably prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances to avoid danger.⁹⁹ If he fails to use such care he cannot recover for injuries to which such failure contributes,¹ but a neglect of duty not proximately contributing to the accident will not bar recovery.²

The amount of care required of a person standing or sitting in the highway is commensurate with the danger involved,³ and whether reasonable care has been exercised depends on all the circumstances.⁴ Among the elements to be considered are the type of highway, its locality, the mode of travel, the amount of traffic, the time of the occurrence, the weather conditions then existing, the purpose for which plaintiff was on the highway, and his opportunity to avoid injury.⁵ Ordinarily a person standing in a place of safety who steps in front of an automobile is guilty of negligence,⁶ and it is also negligence to make no effort to avoid being hit by an approaching vehicle.⁷

b. Duty to Look or Listen

A person standing or sitting in the highway must exercise ordinary or reasonable care to observe approaching motor vehicles; but such care does not require that a constant lookout be kept.

A person standing or sitting in the highway is required to use ordinary or reasonable care to observe the approach of motor vehicles,⁸ and a failure to do so may render him guilty of contributory negligence.⁹ So it may constitute negligence for a person to stand in a position of imminent or obvious danger and remain inattentive to approaching ve-he was putting out a lighted flare, guilty of contributory negligence, notwithstanding conflicting evidence as to position of stalled truck.—Bates v. Hayden, National Casualty Co., Intervenor, 1st App., 188 So. 751.

Regulation held inapplicable

Statute requiring a pedestrian to walk on left side of highway did not apply to plaintiff who, while placing a lighted flare back of his stalled truck, was struck by another truck approaching from rear, since plaintiff was acting within statute relating to placing of flares.—*Bates v. Foresight required

Where defendant's vehicle, while making a delivery and while standing unlighted and at angle to curb, sustained collision damage, and plaintiff walked into street at driver's request to inspect the damage, foresight required of plaintiff as to danger was the same as that required of truck driver, so that, where automobile thereafter struck truck and caromed off against plaintiff, anything proving defendant's liability proved contributory negligence, and verdict for plaintiff could not stand.—Levine v. Shell Eastern Petroleum Products, C.C.A.N.Y., 78 F.2d 292, certiorari denied 55 S.Ct. 545, 294 U.S. 719, 79 L.Ed. 1251.

Violation of statute

Where pedestrians who were standing on right side of road, at night, were struck by a truck approaching from rear, the driver of which could have seen pedestrians three hundred fifty feet ahead and avoided striking them by a slight turn to left, pedestrians' violation of statute requiring them to keep on left side of highway was not a proximate cause of accident, and hence pedestrians were not guilty of contributory negligence which would bar recovery for death of pedestrian.—*Gregory v. hicles,¹⁰ or to fail to look for an automobile coming from the direction from which traffic would be expected to come over that part of the street in which he is stationed;¹¹ but it is not negligence as a matter of law to fail to look or listen for a vehicle traveling on the wrong side of the road.¹² Ordinary care does not, however, strictly require a person standing on the highway constantly to be on the lookout for approaching motor vehicles,¹³ especially when he is in a place of apparent safety,¹⁴ or to look for approaching vehicles where there is room for an automobile to pass him without interference;¹⁵ and one taking a position on, or immediately in front of, a plainly visible obstruction in the street is not necessarily negligent in failing to observe traffic.¹⁶ Thus, a person standing close to and just behind a parked automobile¹⁷ or in immediate proximity to a machine engaged in construction work in the highway¹⁸ is not negligent as a matter of law in failing to look for an automobile which approaches and strikes him.

c. Reliance on Care of Operator

Ordinarily a person standing in the highway may rely on the observance of regulations and of the rules of the road by the operator of an approaching motor vehicle, and may properly assume that the operator will exercise ordinary care to protect him.

Under the rule that a pedestrian on the highway is entitled to assume that others using it in common with him will exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring him, as discussed supra § 468, a person who is standing in the highway in a place of apparent or reasonable safety, or in a place where he has a right to be, has the right to rely on the observance of regulations and of the rules of the road by the operator of an approaching automobile.¹⁹ The pedestrian on the highway is not required to anticipate the motorist's negligence,²⁰ so that he is not chargeable with contributory negligence, when standing on the side of the highway, in failing to anticipate that the approaching vehicle will leave the traveled portion of the highway and injure him.²¹ A person standing on the highway may properly assume that the operator of an approaching vehicle will exercise ordinary care to protect him,²² that he will give a warning signal,²³ and that he will not run the pedestrian down, but will avoid contact with him,²⁴ especially when there is room for the vehicle to pass without interference.²⁵ A person standing near the edge of the road is not required to assume either that the approaching motorist does not see him²⁶ or that, having seen him, the motorist means to drive him off the highway.²⁷

In view of the right to rely on a motorist's use of due care, a person standing in the narrow space between the curb and a vehicle with whose driver he is conversing is not negligent as a matter of law when the vehicle is struck by an automobile being driven on the wrong side of the street;²⁸ and one in a place of apparent safety is not required as a matter of law to leave it on the assumption that an approaching automobile will leave the traveled roadway and strike him.²⁹ Also, it is not necessarily negligence to stand at the left side of a stopped automobile on the approach of another motor vehicle from the opposite direction to that in which the car is headed, where there is room for the approaching vehicle to pass without interference;³⁰ and a pedestrian who turns out into the roadway to avoid an obstruction on the sidewalk and, on the approach of a vehicle as he is passing around the obstruction, stands still where it apparently has room to pass, is not negligent as a matter of law in so doing.³¹

Streetcar loading space. One standing close to a streetcar track in a place ordinarily used by persons about to board a car is not negligent as a matter of law in assuming that an automobile will not be driven into such space,³² even though he is not in fact waiting for a streetcar.³³

Articles projecting from vehicle. A person standing in a roadway with his back to a passing motor truck is not bound to anticipate that its driver would so negligently turn it that a part of its load projecting from the rear of it would strike him,³⁴ and, therefore, is not negligent as a matter of law in failing to avoid injury.³⁵

A pedestrian's right on the sidewalk is superior to that of motor vehicles, and he is not negligent in assuming that it is safe from the danger of vehicles passing on or across it, but nevertheless he must exercise due care to avoid injury.

A pedestrian has a right on the sidewalk or other space set aside for the use of pedestrians superior to that of motor vehicles.³⁶ Nevertheless, with respect to passing vehicles, he is required to exercise ordinary or due care to avoid injury,³⁷ although he need not take the same precautions as one who is walking on³⁸ or crossing³⁹ the highway. A pedestrian on the sidewalk and entirely within the outside curb line is not required to keep a lookout for approaching vehicles⁴⁰ unless he intends to enter the highway⁴¹ or to extend a part of his body beyond the outside curb line;⁴² but, when it is reasonably apparent that an approaching vehicle will come in contact with him, the situation must be avoided if there is a reasonable opportunity to do so.⁴³

Reliance on care of motorist. A pedestrian on the sidewalk may rely on the expectation that vehicles will conform to the customary rules of traffic⁴⁴ and travel only on the proper side of the street,⁴⁵ and he is not negligent in assuming that the sidewalk is safe from the danger of automobiles passing on or across it.⁴⁶ The pedestrian on the sidewalk is not negligent in failing to anticipate that the driver of a vehicle in the street will so operate it as to endanger his safety,⁴⁷ such as by moving into his zone of safety⁴⁸ or by causing articles projecting from the vehicle to strike him.⁴⁹

Fact that a pedestrian, who was struck by bus when it was driven so close to curbstone that its body projected over sidewalk, might have intended to do that which was improper by crossing street at a place other than crosswalk or intersection did not require inference that pedestrian was negligent, as long as he stood on sidewalk, nor did the fact that he was in a place usually reserved for loading and unloading bus passengers take from him the right to stand there, although he did not intend to become a passenger on bus.—Riegel v. § 474. — Crossing Private Driveway

A pedestrian on the sidewalk crossing a private driveway has the right of way over a motor vehicle emerging from private property, and is bound to exercise only reasonable and ordinary care to avoid injury.

A pedestrian on the sidewalk crossing a private driveway is not a trespasser,⁵⁰ but has the right of way over a motor vehicle emerging from private property,⁵¹ and is bound to exercise only reasonable and ordinary care to avoid injury.⁵² He may reasonably anticipate less frequent and serious dangers than if he were walking in that portion of the highway where vehicles regularly travel,⁵³ and may assume that the operator of a vehicle will take the necessary precautions required by law⁵⁴ and will not negligently run him down.⁵⁵ When a pedestrian and a vehicle approach a crossing over a sidewalk at the same time, and both stop, the pedestrian is not negligent in assuming that the driver of the automobile will not resume his progress over the sidewalk without first making sure that he will not injure the pedestrian.⁵⁶

The pedestrian is not required, as a matter of law, to be on the lookout for automobiles crossing the sidewalk,⁵⁷ and the fact that he fails to see such a vehicle approaching does not as a matter of law render him guilty of negligence.⁵⁸ It has been held, however, that where a pedestrian, while walking along the sidewalk, came in contact with a vehicle which was coming out of an alley at a moderate rate of speed and had advanced so that the rear wheel was in the center of the sidewalk when it struck him, he was chargeable with contributory negligence as a matter of law in failing to observe it.⁵⁹

§ 475. Police or Traffic Officers

A police or traffic officer, while performing his duties in the street, must exercise ordinary or reasonable care to avoid injury from motor vehicles.

A police or traffic officer, while acting in the line of his duties in the street, must exercise ordinary or reasonable care to avoid injury from motor vehicles,⁶⁰ and ordinarily cannot recover for injuries which are caused by his own negligence.⁶¹ He need not, however, exercise as high a degree of care as is required of an ordinary pedestrian,⁶² and may act on the assumption that automobile drivers will obey the laws of the road⁶³ and exercise due care to avoid injuring him.⁶⁴

Special or private policemen; volunteers. In considering the degree of care required to be exercised by a special traffic policeman, an important factor is the nature and requirements of his work.⁶⁵

In order to perform his assigned duties with reasonable adequacy, he is not required to watch constantly and continuously for the approach of vehicles from any and all directions;⁶⁶ but his legal duty is to keep a reasonable lookout and to exercise care in the circumstances commensurate with the dangers and consistent with his faithful performance of the duties of his employment.⁶⁷ He is entitled to assume that the operators of approaching vehicles will observe his presence and avoid him.⁶⁸ A volunteer traffic director standing in his chosen place on the highway and attempting to give warning of danger to approaching motorists is not exempt from the law of contributory negligence and his failure to use due care may preclude his recovery for injuries inflicted by a motor vehicle.⁶⁹

§ 476. Persons Working on or in Highway

- a. In general
- b. Repairing, adjusting, or assisting vehicles on highway

a. In General

A person who is required to work on or in the traveled part of a highway must exercise ordinary, reasonable, or due care to avoid injury by passing vehicles, but he is not required to exercise as high a degree of precaution as is required of a pedestrian.

A person whose duties require him to work on or in the traveled part of a highway must exercise ordinary, reasonable, or due care to avoid being injured by passing motor vehicles,⁷⁰ including such use of his senses of sight and hearing to discover their approach and such precautions against injury therefrom as an ordinarily prudent man similarly situated would exercise,⁷¹ and failure to exercise the required care may constitute contributory negligence barring recovery for injuries received.⁷² Recovery may not be denied, however, solely on the ground that the person working on the highway voluntarily assumed the risk of any injury.⁷³ Non-compliance with regulations relating to the use of the highway may sometimes constitute negligence per se,⁷⁴ but a person working in a highway who fails to display red lights required by an ordinance is not barred from recovering for injuries caused by a motor vehicle unless such failure contributed proximately to cause the injury.⁷⁵

The extent of care which a person working on the highway is required to exercise to avoid injury from passing motor vehicles depends on all the dangers which he should reasonably anticipate in the circumstances.⁷⁶ Inasmuch as such a person is required to devote the most of his attention to his work, ordinary care in his case usually does not require as high a degree of precaution as is required

The rule that a pedestrian and a motorist have equal rights upon highway did not permit a highway employee to recover for injuries received when struck by motorist, where employee, who was standing on motorist's right side of highway, with knowledge of icy condition of roads and after observing motorist's approaching automobile when it was approximately two hundred feet from employee, failed to move back from edge of pavement.—Cumming v. One who is necessarily working on a highway or other place where there is vehicular traffic, and is injured through the negligent operation of a vehicle, cannot be deprived of his cause of action for damages on the theory that he voluntarily assumed the risk of injury.—Hedding v. Excessive noise

Linemen's helper, struck by street paving contractor's truck while standing near pole in street, was bound to use greater care and look more vigilantly for trucks, if noise of concrete mixer affected his ability to hear them, than otherwise.—Warnke v. Griffith Co., 24 P.2d 583, 133 Cal.App. 481.

of a pedestrian,⁷⁷ but this rule is inapplicable to a person who is not compelled by the nature of his work to be in the street,⁷⁸ or who is not engaged in labor on the highway requiring attention to his work⁷⁹ and is otherwise free to take precautions for his own safety.⁸⁰ A person working on or in the highway may assume that the other users of the highway will conform to, and not violate, governmental regulations⁸¹ and the rules of the road,⁸² and that approaching motorists will observe warnings and bring their vehicles under control.⁸³ He is entitled to rely to some extent on the assumption that automobile drivers will exercise due care to avoid injuring him,⁸⁴ and, therefore, is not required to keep a constant lookout for such vehicles,⁸⁵ and is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence if, by reason of his attention to his work, he fails to look out for and discover approaching motor vehicles.⁸⁶ However, the person working on the highway may not for such reason omit any care which the law otherwise demands of him.⁸⁷

The rule that persons who are working in or on streets and highways need not exercise the highest degree of diligence and look out constantly for approaching vehicles has been applied to persons injured while engaged in their work as street cleaners,⁸⁸ street repairmen,⁸⁹ streetcar conductors,⁹⁰

Where plaintiff, although a member of crew working in street and carrying two angle irons as he attempted to cross street, was not required to give angle irons any of his attention, so that plaintiff while crossing street had no duty to perform different from that which other pedestrians had to perform, he was required to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, and the giving of instruction which erroneously afforded to plaintiff benefit of protection given workmen on a street so engaged that their attention must be given to their work and not to their surroundings was error.—Gunning v. b. Repairing, Adjusting, or Assisting Vehicles on Highway

A person who stands on the highway to repair, adjust, or assist the movement of a vehicle must exercise ordinary care to avoid injury by passing motor vehicles.

A person who stands temporarily on the highway to repair or adjust a vehicle, or to assist in the movement of a disabled vehicle, is bound to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury by passing motor vehicles,⁹⁶ as by complying with governmental regulations relating to the place of parking or stopping⁹⁷ or to the preservation of life and limb.⁹⁸ If his failure to use due care contributes proximately to cause his injuries, he is guilty of contributory negligence, and is barred from recovery therefor,⁹⁹ but failure to comply with an ordinance does not bar recovery if it is not the proximate cause of the accident.¹

A person engaged in repairing or assisting the movement of a vehicle on the highway is required to exercise only that degree of care which ordinarily prudent persons would use under the same or similar circumstances to avoid injury.² He is not

Leaving ample room to pass

Attempt to repair disabled truck extending five feet over pavement was not contributory negligence, where bus approaching from front and striking decedent repairing truck had ample room to pass.—Davis v. North Coast Transp. Co., 295 P. 921, 160 Wash. 576.

Assumed risk

An automobile passenger, placing himself in front of automobile to aid driver in repairing tire at night while automobile was standing partly on paved portion of highway assumed risk of being struck by automobile as result of its being run into from rear by another automobile.—Basinger v. Yarian, Ohio App. 49 NE 2d 104.

97. Ky.—Tate v. Hall, 57 S.W.2d 986, 247 Ky 843

Statute held not violated

(1) One struck by automobile while repairing truck disabled on highway, from which it was temporarily impracticable to remove it, was not violating statute so as to preclude recovery for injuries sustained.—Tate v. Hall, supra.

(2) Motorist struck by automobile while changing tire on road, if such action was reasonably necessary, was not "parked" on highway within statute forbidding parking vehicles thereon when it is practicable to leave them elsewhere.—Tibbetts v. Dunton, 174 A. 453, 133 Me. 128.

(3) One undertaking to fasten more securely red lantern to truck on traveled portion of highway was not violating ordinance of highway commission making it unlawful to repair truck on used or traveled portion of highway.—Babbs v. Eury, 175 S.E. 100, 206 N.C. 679.

Stopping on highway

(1) Negligence of operator of highway grader which was struck by truck, in leaving grader standing on roadway while making repair when it was practical to move it off roadway, was contributing cause of operator's injury.—Kassela v. Hoseth, 258 N.W. 340, 217 Wis. 115.

(2) Person changing tire on automobile parked near center of highway, notwithstanding existence of adequate shoulders, on dark, rainy night, was guilty, as matter of law, of contributory negligence proximately contributing to injury sustained when struck by parked automobile propelled forward by overtaking automobile.—Dragotis v. Kennedy, 250 N.W. 804, 190 Minn. 128.

Knowledge of danger

(1) Where motorist was injured by collision of automobile with stationary service truck while he was at night assisting service truck operator in attaching cable from truck to motorist's disabled automobile, and motorist's knowledge of dangerous condition on highway created by operator's alleged negligence equaled that of operator and his employers, they were not liable for motorist's injuries.—Brucker v. Matsen, 139 P. 2d 276, 18 Wash 2d 375.

(2) Helper placing chain on wheel of truck standing diagonally on icy and hilly street was negligent in not watching defendant's ascending truck after it passed him, where he knew, or should have known, of the danger of the truck slipping down the hill, as his own truck had done.—Dahlman v. Petrovich, 156 A. 897, 102 Pa.Super. 454, affirmed 161 A. 550, 307 Pa. 298.

bound to anticipate negligence on the part of the operators of approaching vehicles,³ and, in the absence of circumstances which would afford notice to the contrary,⁴ he may rely to some extent on the belief that the operators of motor vehicles will exercise ordinary care⁵ and will observe the rules of the road⁶ so as to avoid injuring him. Accordingly, he need not continuously watch for approaching vehicles where the nature of the work in which he is engaged requires his attention.⁷

A person doing repair work on his motor vehicle in the street is not necessarily guilty of negligence in being outside the line of his vehicle;⁸ and, where in making repairs he is protected by red lights and street lamps, he is not bound as a matter of law to anticipate that another vehicle will pass so near as to strike him,⁹ even though some part of his body is outside the line of the vehicle.¹⁰ However, if he unnecessarily places his body in a position of danger and thereby contributes to the accident which causes the injury, he is guilty of negligence.¹¹ A person adjusting a tow rope on a stalled car¹² or pushing his car along the right side of the road¹³ has been held not a "pedestrian" within a regulation requiring pedestrians to walk on the left of the road.

§ 477. Persons Boarding or Alighting from Streetcar or Other Vehicle

A person boarding or alighting from a street car or other vehicle has an equal right in the street with a motorist but must use ordinary care under the circumstances not to collide with, or be struck by, motor vehicles.

A person crossing a traveled roadway of a street or highway to or from a street car or other vehicle therein, or standing in the roadway waiting for such car or after alighting therefrom, has an equal right in the street with the driver of an automobile,¹⁴ but, like every other user of the highway, he must use ordinary care under the particular circumstances not to collide with, or be struck by, motor vehicles.¹⁵ A person standing upon the highway for the purpose of entering an automobile is a "pedestrian" within a statutory definition of the word,¹⁶ and he is not negligent as a matter of law in being upon the highway under such circumstances.¹⁷ A person entering a parked vehicle on the left side nearest to traffic is not negligent in so entering the vehicle.¹⁸

§ 478. — Crossing Street

- a. In general
- b. Place and manner of crossing

a. In General

The rules relating to the care required of a pedestrian crossing a street or highway ordinarily govern the conduct of a person crossing a roadway to or from a street car or other vehicle, and such person must exercise reasonable care for his own safety and protection.

The rules relating to the care required of a pedestrian crossing a street or highway, as discussed generally supra § 470, govern also the conduct of a person crossing a traveled roadway to or from a streetcar or other vehicle, as far as applicable.¹⁹ Such person is bound to exercise what is, under the circumstances, reasonable care for his own safety and protection,²⁰ commensurate with the danger involved;²¹ and, if he is confronted with a sudden emergency, the standard of care required of him is what a reasonably careful man would do in a like emergency or under similar circumstances.²² Although various regulations grant such person the right of way, in certain circumstances,²³ they do not relieve him of the duty to exercise reasonable care for his own safety.²⁴

Crossing in front of automobile. One alighting from a streetcar or other vehicle in the street is not negligent as a matter of law in crossing to the side of the street ahead of an approaching motor vehicle when he reasonably believes that he has time to do so in safety;²⁵ but he is negligent in attempting to cross ahead of an automobile which he sees or in the exercise of reasonable care should have seen approaching him and in close proximity to him.²⁶ The fact that he heard the approach of an automobile before stepping into the roadway will not, however, prevent a recovery for injuries sustained by a collision with it when the accident was caused by the deviation of the automobile from its course.²⁷ When an automobile stops on approaching a standing streetcar discharging passengers, as required by law, one who alights from the car is not to be held guilty of negligence in proceeding to cross in front of the automobile, which starts immediately on the starting of the streetcar and before the pedestrian has reached the curb.²⁸

b. Place and Manner of Crossing

A person alighting from a streetcar or other vehicle may cross the street at right angles from where he alighted from the vehicle, and, ordinarily, in the absence of a restrictive regulation, he is not negligent as a matter of law in crossing diagonally, or at a place between intersections, or to or from the opposite side of the street.

A person alighting from a streetcar or other vehicle has the right to cross the street at right angles from where he alighted from the vehicle,²⁹ and, if there are no street cross-walk lines at the place of alighting, he has the right to find a reasonably safe lane of travel.³⁰ In the absence of governmental regulation providing otherwise, one alighting from a streetcar or other vehicle has the right to walk diagonally toward the side of the roadway, and, therefore, is not negligent as a matter of law in so doing,³¹ but ordinary care under the circumstances may call for additional vigilance on his part.³²

Crossing at other than regular place. A passenger alighting from a streetcar or other vehicle in the street between intersections has a right in the roadway equal to that of motor vehicles,³³ and he is not negligent merely because he crosses the street at such point,³⁴ although he must observe a greater degree of care than where a crosswalk is used.³⁵ Where a streetcar stops some distance from the crossing or its regular stopping place and the conductor invites passengers to alight, it is the right as well as the duty of the passengers to reach the sidewalk as expeditiously as possible,³⁶ having due regard to the traffic conditions upon the street;³⁷ and one who does so alight and crosses to the side of the street after using reasonable care to look for and discover the approach of automobiles is not guilty of negligence as a matter of law.³⁸

Crossing to or from opposite side of street. A person alighting from a streetcar or other vehicle is not negligent as a matter of law in crossing behind or in front of it toward the opposite side of the street or roadway,³⁹ and, being entitled to assume that no automobile will pass it on the wrong side, as discussed infra § 482, he is required to exercise only reasonable care in so crossing.⁴⁰ Similarly, one who crosses in front of a streetcar with intent to board it is not negligent as a matter of law in so doing.⁴¹ However, a person crossing from the opposite side of the street at the rear of the streetcar and between intersections for the purpose of boarding it is not entitled to the benefit of a regulation granting a right of way to persons boarding and alighting from streetcars,⁴² since such a regulation grants a right of way only to passengers on the right-hand side of the street over the portion of the street between the curb and the streetcar.⁴³

Restrictive regulations. A person crossing the traveled roadway after alighting from a streetcar or other vehicle is a pedestrian, within the meaning of an ordinance prohibiting pedestrians from crossing streets diagonally,⁴⁴ and his violation of such ordinance has been held to constitute negligence.⁴⁵ However, a regulation prohibiting pedestrians from crossing a roadway other than at a crosswalk has been held to have no application to a person crossing from a safety zone to the nearest curb after alighting from a streetcar or other vehicle.⁴⁶ Under a similar regulation a person crossing to a safety island which is midway between intersections has been held to be crossing the street at a regular crossing,⁴⁷ and a person alighting at such an island from which there are no pedestrian lanes is entitled to proceed in any direction,⁴⁸ especially where the regulation provides that pedestrians may make necessary use of the roadway.⁴⁹

A regulation prohibiting pedestrians from using the roadway of a street between intersections, except to board a streetcar or to enter a safety zone at right angles, has no application to a person alighting from a streetcar and crossing toward the opposite side of the street,⁵⁰ and, therefore, one so crossing cannot be held negligent as a matter of law as for a violation of such regulation.⁵¹ An ordinance requiring pedestrians, where traffic is regulated, to cross streets with released traffic does not apply to a person alighting from a streetcar and crossing from the vehicle to the nearest curb,⁵² and a violation of such an ordinance does not alone preclude recovery;⁵³ but a person alighting from a streetcar or other vehicle, who crosses behind the vehicle to the opposite curb against the traffic signal in violation of the ordinance, is negligent per se.⁵⁴

It is not negligence as a matter of law to await the arrival of an approaching streetcar or other vehicle in the street at a regular stopping place thereof, but the person so waiting is required to use ordinary care for his own safety and protection.

It is not negligence as a matter of law to stand in the traveled portion of a street or highway to await the arrival of an approaching streetcar or other vehicle, at a regular stopping place thereof,⁵⁵ or to stand at the outer edge of the roadway to give a signal preparatory to boarding such approaching vehicle,⁵⁶ and one so doing is not strictly bound to get out of the way of an approaching automobile.⁵⁷ However, a person so waiting in the street is, like every other user of the highway, required to exercise ordinary care for his own safety and protection,⁵⁸ and it has been held that a statute imposing a penalty on a pedestrian who negligently uses the street or recklessly disregards his own safety is proper to be considered in determining whether or not he has done so.⁵⁹ He is not necessarily negligent in stepping back one step to permit a passenger to alight from the street car he is about to board,⁶⁰ or in stepping in front of a motor vehicle when threatened with danger by the near approach of another automobile.⁶¹

§ 480. — Alighting from Streetcar or Vehicle

A person is not negligent as a matter of law in standing in a street or highway on alighting from a streetcar or other vehicle, but he is required to use the care and prudence of an ordinary person under similar circumstances.

It is not of itself negligence for a person to descend from a streetcar or other vehicle and consequently to be standing upon the highway,⁶² even though the descent is made on the side toward the open road;⁶³ nor does it constitute negligence as a matter of law for a person, after alighting, to stand by the side of the car until it passes and permits crossing toward the opposite side of the street.⁶⁴ However, such a person, like every other user of the highway, is required to use the care and prudence of an ordinary person for his own safety and protection,⁶⁵ and to see that he does not place himself in such situation that injury will probably result to him;⁶⁶ and a failure to use such care may, under the circumstances, constitute negligence.⁶⁷ It has been held that a person intending to alight should remain on the streetcar until he has reasonably ascertained that it is safe for him to step into the street without being struck by an approaching motor vehicle;⁶⁸ but, when a car stops and it is announced that passengers are to alight, the passenger ordinarily has the right to assume that it is safe for him so to alight in the ordinary manner.⁶⁹

Alighting at unusual place. A person who alights from a streetcar or other vehicle in the middle of a block or at other than a regular stopping place thereof is not negligent as a matter of law,⁷⁰ but, in view of the duty resting on him to exercise reasonable care under all the circumstances, in so doing he is ordinarily required to be more cautious and vigilant for his own protection than when he alights at a regular stopping place,⁷¹ and a failure thereof may constitute negligence.⁷²

(1) In General

A person crossing a street or highway for the purpose of boarding, or after alighting from, a vehicle is not as a matter of law negligent in failing to look or listen for the approach of motor vehicles, but due care under the circumstances may require him to look or listen in which case his failure so to do may be negligence.

A person crossing a traveled portion of a street or highway, for the purpose of boarding, or after alighting from, a streetcar or other vehicle, has an equal right in the highway with motor vehicles, as discussed supra § 477, and, therefore, is not as a matter of law negligent in failing to look or listen for their approach.⁷⁹ However, the duty of such person as a user of the highway to exercise reasonable care for his own safety may, under the circumstances, require him to look or listen for approaching vehicles,⁸⁰ even though he may have the right of way,⁸¹ in which case his failure so to do may be negligence,⁸² which will preclude a recovery where it is a proximate or contributing cause of the injury.⁸³ Thus, one who crosses a street to or from a streetcar or other vehicle with an umbrella so held as to obscure his vision,⁸⁴ or runs into the side of,⁸⁵ or is struck by,⁸⁶ an automobile approaching in plain sight, may be guilty of negligence. On the other hand, where a traffic regulation requires motorists to stop, a prospective passenger of a streetcar is not negligent in stepping into the street without looking,⁸⁷ but such a regulation does not absolve him from all care where he enters a possibly dangerous position.⁸⁸

(2) Extent of Duty

A person crossing to or from a street car or other vehicle must keep such a lookout as would be maintained by an ordinarily prudent person under the circumstances, and it may be necessary to look more than once in all directions from which danger may be apprehended, and it may be negligence to fail to see what is in plain view.

The extent of the duty of lookout imposed on a person crossing a street or highway to board, or after alighting from, a vehicle is to be determined by what an ordinarily prudent person would be expected to do under similar circumstances.⁸⁹ A person crossing to or from a vehicle ordinarily should look in all the directions from which danger may reasonably be apprehended,⁹⁰ but he is not required, in the exercise of ordinary care, to look the whole distance that a motor vehicle might be visible.⁹¹ He need look only far enough to warrant an ordinarily careful and prudent person in concluding that no such automobile is in such proximity as, if properly managed and controlled, to endanger his safety in crossing,⁹² in view of his right to rely on the exercise of reasonable care and compliance with the law on the part of drivers thereof, as discussed infra § 482.

Looking again. There is no imperative rule of law requiring a person crossing a roadway to or from a streetcar or other vehicle to be repeatedly and continuously looking for approaching vehicles, under the penalty that his failure to do so will constitute negligence,⁹³ and, hence, when on alighting from the vehicle or on leaving the curb, he has looked and has seen nothing, he is not as a matter of law negligent in proceeding to cross without looking again,⁹⁴ especially where the street is not much used or frequented by vehicles and, therefore, is not an exceptionally dangerous place.⁹⁵ However, he must make reasonable observations along the course of the street for approaching vehicles as long as he is within the area of danger,⁹⁶ regardless of the fact that the crossing is started with a traffic light in his favor,⁹⁷ and he may be negligent in fact, under the circumstances, in failing to continue or repeat his observation,⁹⁸ as where a considerable time elapses between his looking and alighting from the vehicle.⁹⁹

Failure to see. Since, as discussed supra § 458, the duty to look ordinarily implies the duty to see what is in plain sight, a person crossing to or from a streetcar or other vehicle, who has looked, may be negligent in failing to see a vehicle which is in plain view.¹ However, if he looks and listens with reasonable care for approaching automobiles, and sees none, he may not be negligent as a matter of law in failing to see a motor vehicle which strikes him,² especially where the vehicle is traveling at an excessive speed,³ or without lights,⁴ or where the view is obstructed.⁵

ing, or alighting from, a streetcar or other vehicle is not always guilty of negligence in failing to look for approaching motor vehicles, but due care under the circumstances may require that a lookout be maintained, so that a failure of duty in this respect will constitute negligence.

A person alighting from a streetcar or other vehicle onto a street or highway is not guilty of negligence as a matter of law in failing to look in the direction from which motor vehicles would approach,⁶ but the duty to exercise reasonable care under the circumstances may require him to look or listen,⁷ in which case the omission so to do may be negligence,⁸ barring a recovery where it is a direct and contributing cause of the injury.⁹ The failure to look or listen may constitute negligence especially where a person alights at a point other than a regular stopping place,¹⁰ or alights from a vehicle parked at the curb into the roadway of a busy street,¹¹ or alights from a vehicle on the narrow open portion of a road.¹²

The duty to look has been said to be of lesser degree in the case of one stepping from a streetcar into the traveled roadway than of a pedestrian leaving the curb to cross the street,¹³ because the latter is leaving a place of safety for one of danger, whereas careful observation on the part of the former, already in a dangerous situation, may not increase the safety of his position, and he may be more careful in attempting to reach the side of the street than to stop where he alights.¹⁴ In determining whether a failure to look is negligent, it is proper to consider the fact that a passenger, in alighting from a vehicle, ordinarily faces at right angles to the direction from which automobiles approach,¹⁵ and that he is entitled to assume that the driver of a motor vehicle will not attempt to pass so close to a streetcar or other vehicle discharging passengers as not to allow a reasonable space for them to step from the car to the street.¹⁶

law negligent in failing to look for or see an approaching motor vehicle,¹⁷ especially when the automobile is on the wrong side of the street;¹⁸ and, similarly, one about to board a streetcar which is stopping is not necessarily negligent in walking by its side a few steps in the direction in which it is moving.¹⁹ However, in view of the duty resting on every user of the highway to exercise reasonable care for his own safety and protection, as discussed generally supra § 457, a person is not entitled to take a position in the street, even very close to the car tracks, as a streetcar approaches, and remain oblivious to his surroundings,²⁰ and a want of ordinary care in keeping a lookout constitutes negligence.²¹

In safety zone. A person alighting from a streetcar or other vehicle, or waiting therefor, at a place over which a statute or ordinance positively forbids the movement of motor vehicles, is not required to look for approaching automobiles, under the penalty that on failing to do so he will be deemed negligent as a matter of law.²²

§ 482. — Reliance on Care of Automobile Driver

A person boarding or alighting from a streetcar or other vehicle is not negligent as a matter of law in assuming that motorists will use reasonable care with respect to his position and will obey the law, but this does not absolve him from the duty to use ordinary care for his own safety.

In view of the right of a pedestrian using the highway to rely on the exercise of ordinary care and compliance with the law on the part of others using it in common with him, as discussed generally supra § 468, a person about to board a streetcar or other vehicle in the street or highway, or who is alighting or has alighted therefrom, is not negligent as a matter of law in assuming that the drivers of motor vehicles which may approach him will use reasonable care with respect to his position,²³ and will obey the law;²⁴ and he is not required to anticipate the negligence of the approaching motorist,²⁵ or his violation of the rules of the road.²⁶

It may be assumed that the driver of the approaching vehicle will have his automobile under proper control,²⁷ and that it will not depart from its legal and ordinary course of travel,²⁸ or pass on the wrong side of the streetcar²⁹ or on the left-hand side of the street.³⁰ It may also be assumed that a driver will not operate his automobile at a dangerous or illegal speed,³¹ and will comply with a regulation requiring him to stop, or to slow down and stop if necessary, when approaching a streetcar or other vehicle taking on or discharging passengers³² or prohibiting him from approaching closer to it than a specified distance.³³ The right to assume that a motorist will exercise due care does not, however, absolve a person boarding or alighting from the car from using ordinary care for his own safety,³⁴ and, if he becomes or would become, in the exercise of ordinary care, aware of danger in time to avoid being injured, and fails to do so, he is negligent.³⁵

A person in a safety zone has a right to deem himself secure from the dangers incident to motor vehicle traffic,³⁶ but is nevertheless bound to exercise reasonable care to avoid danger which is apparent.³⁷ A person alighting from a streetcar or other vehicle at a safety zone has no right to assume that motorists moving pursuant to traffic lights will stop to let him cross the street to the sidewalk,³⁸ and a person who acts under such an assumption may be guilty of negligence.³⁹

§ 483. Occupants or Operators of Railroad Cars or Streetcars

The occupants or operators of a railroad or streetcar must exercise reasonable care to avoid injury by, or collision with, motor vehicles, and the failure to exercise such care or to comply with statutory requirements may constitute negligence precluding recovery for an injury of which it is a contributing cause.

A person riding on a streetcar must exercise a degree of care commensurate with the obvious dangers to avoid injury by motor vehicles.⁴⁰ Ordinary care, however, is all that is required.⁴¹ He is not bound to anticipate negligence on the part of operators of motor vehicles.⁴² It is not negligence per se for a passenger to ride with his arm extended out of the car window where it is struck by a passing motor truck.⁴³ A passenger on a crowded streetcar standing on a bumper outside the rear platform is not guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery by him for injuries sustained when a motor vehicle following the streetcar failed to stop and ran into him when the streetcar slowed down and stopped.⁴⁴

Motormen and conductors of streetcars. A motorman of a streetcar is required to exercise ordinary care to see and to take precautions to avoid injury from collisions between his streetcar and motor vehicles⁴⁵ and to comply with regulations as to speed and right of way.⁴⁶ However, ordinary care is all that is required.⁴⁷ He has the right to assume that a motorist will exercise care and vigilance,⁴⁸ and need not anticipate and avoid any exigency that might possibly arise.⁴⁹ A conductor of a streetcar engaged in collecting fares on the running board of his car, and exercising ordinary care to see and avoid injury from other vehicles, is not guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery for injuries sustained as a result of a collision between the streetcar and a motor vehicle.⁵⁰

Railroads. Employees of a railroad are required to exercise ordinary care to discover vehicles on tracks at highway crossings,⁵¹ and to apprehend and act on danger signals,⁵² in order to avoid being charged with contributory negligence as to injury or damage inflicted by a motor vehicle. Due care must also be exercised to avoid a collision with an approaching vehicle,⁵³ even though the vehicle is being negligently operated,⁵⁴ but the operation of a train at high speed through open country does not, it has been held, constitute negligence.⁵⁵ The operator of a railroad car has the right to assume that a motor vehicle approaching a crossing will stop before reaching the track where the train has the right of way,⁵⁶ and that the motorist will observe the law of "look and listen" before proceeding to drive on the crossing.⁵⁷

The operators of railroad vehicles usually must give warning signals of their approach to a crossing,⁵⁸ and the failure to give the signals required by regulation before reaching a crossing has been held to constitute negligence.⁵⁹ Where, however, a sufficient warning is given, the operator of the railroad vehicle is not negligent.⁶⁰ The operation of a motor car on a railroad track without signaling apparatus,⁶¹ or without giving a warning of its approach to a crossing,⁶² has been held to constitute negligence; but it has also been held that the operator of a railroad speeder, not equipped with any signal device, which carried only two passengers and was used for inspection, was not negligent per se in failing to give any warning of approach to a crossing,⁶³ since the statutory warning requirements applicable to the engineer of a locomotive do not apply to the operator of such a speeder.⁶⁴

With respect to injury to a railroad car by a motor vehicle for which recovery is sought, the standard by which the duty of the railroad in maintaining a crossing is measured is based on the use being made of the highway at the time of the accident.⁶⁵ Thus, a crossing at a highway designated as a state detour is required to be in such condition and repair as not to impair its usefulness or interfere with its free use, and so as to afford security for life and property.⁶⁶ A failure so to maintain such a crossing is negligence.⁶⁷

Recovery precluded by negligence. The negligence of an occupant or operator of a railroad or streetcar will preclude a recovery for the injury received, where it is a contributing cause of the injury,⁶⁸ but not otherwise.⁶⁹

§ 484. Persons under Disability

- a. In general
- b. Intoxicated persons

a. In General

A person under any physical disability may have the right to use or traverse the highway but he is required to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury by a motor vehicle and the failure to do so may constitute contributory negligence barring recovery for an injury.

Persons under a physical disability, such as the aged or infirm, are equally entitled with other pedestrians to the use of the streets and highways,⁷⁰ and are entitled to expect that other users of the highway will exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to them.⁷¹ However, such persons are required to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury by a motor vehicle,⁷² and the failure to exercise such care may constitute contributory negligence barring recovery against the operator of the vehicle causing the injury,⁷³ unless such negligence was not a direct and contributing cause of the injury.⁷⁴ With respect to the degree and amount of care required, a person under a disability must exercise such care in using the streets and highways as a person of ordinary prudence with a similar disability would use under the circumstances,⁷⁵ and he is not required to exercise a greater degree of care for his own safety than would be required of a person under no disability,⁷⁶ or to exercise care sufficient to make good his physical defects.⁷⁷ However, it may be incumbent on him to put forth a greater degree of effort than would otherwise be necessary in order to attain that standard of care which is required of everyone.⁷⁸ A person who is lying upon the street unconscious is not contributorily negligent in failing to yield the right of way to a motor vehicle as required by regulation,⁷⁹ and a person who is in a dazed condition following a collision may not be charged with contributory negligence in failing to exercise due care for his own safety with respect to a subsequent collision.⁸⁰

Blind persons. The mere fact that a person injured by a motor vehicle upon a street or highway was blind and unattended does not in itself show contributory negligence.⁸¹ However, such a person must use ordinary care to avoid being injured by motor vehicles,⁸² and, in determining what constitutes ordinary care on his part, his blindness, and all circumstances affecting the question what care was reasonably necessary to avoid injury, should be considered.⁸³ The fact that a person using the highway is blind may make it incumbent on him to make greater use of his other senses to prevent injury.⁸⁴

Deaf persons. A deaf person has the same rights upon a public street or highway as any other person,⁸⁵ and the mere fact that one injured by a motor vehicle thereon is deaf does not of itself show that he was guilty of contributory negligence.⁸⁶ However, he is guilty of contributory negligence if he fails to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury,⁸⁷ and the fact that he is deaf imposes on him a duty to make greater use of his other senses to that end than would otherwise be required.⁸⁸

The intoxication of a person using the highway does not excuse him from exercising the due care required of a sober person, and, where such intoxication prevents him from using the necessary care and his negligent conduct contributes directly to an injury by a motor vehicle, he cannot recover.

In respect of contributory negligence, the care required of a pedestrian, who is traveling along a street or highway in a state of intoxication, to avoid injury by a motor vehicle is measured by the care which an ordinarily prudent person, not intoxicated, would exercise under similar conditions.⁸⁹ The intoxication of a pedestrian upon a street or highway will not excuse due care on his part⁹⁰ or exculpate him from the consequences of his contributory negligence,⁹¹ but no greater care is required of such a person than is required of one in his sober senses.⁹² The fact of intoxication alone does not bar a recovery,⁹³ and, in itself, is not necessarily evidence of contributory negligence,⁹⁴ although it is a circumstance to be considered on the question of contributory negligence.⁹⁵ The fact of intoxication must contribute to the injury in order to bar a recovery.⁹⁶ However, if the person injured was so intoxicated at the time of his injury as to prevent him from using ordinary care for his own protection, and he did not use such ordinary care and his failure to do so contributed directly to the injury, he cannot recover.⁹⁷

(1) General Rules

A child may be precluded from recovery for an injury inflicted by a motor vehicle where he fails to exercise care and prudence in accordance with his age and capacity, and such lack of care is a direct contributing cause of the accident, but the rule as to the effect of contributory negligence is inapplicable where the child is of such tender years as to be presumed to be incapable of exercising any care or discretion.

As a general rule, infants as well as adults are bound by the law of contributory negligence with respect to their right to recover for injuries received from the operation of a motor vehicle.⁹⁸ However, the standard of care applicable in the case of adults is not ordinarily applied in determining whether a child is guilty of contributory negligence,⁹⁹ and all that is required of an infant is the exercise of care and prudence equal to his ca-

capacity.¹ In other words, the care required of a child to avoid injury by a motor vehicle is that care which would ordinarily be exercised under the same or similar circumstances by a child of ordinary prudence of his age and understanding,² or that care which may reasonably be expected under the same or similar circumstances of children of the same age, capacity, intelligence, and experience.³ So, in determining whether a child used the requisite care, consideration may be given not only to his age, but also to his capacity to appreciate danger,⁴ alertness,⁵ intelligence,⁶ and discretion.⁷ A child may be contributorily negligent as a matter of law where he exposes himself to a danger or risk he has been warned to avoid,⁸ and he may be grossly negligent in remaining in a dangerous position after he becomes aware of an approaching automobile.⁹

The failure of a child injured by a motor vehicle to exercise the degree of care required of him ordinarily will bar recovery for his injuries where such failure contributed proximately to cause his inju-

Reliance on due care of motorist. In the absence of knowledge to the contrary, a child lawfully upon a street or highway need not anticipate negligence on the part of motorists,¹⁷ and he may assume, and rely to some extent on the assumption, that a motorist will exercise ordinary care for his safety,¹⁸ and take proper precautions to save him from injury.¹⁹ A child has a right to assume that the driver of a motor vehicle will comply with the requirements of law as to the operation of his vehicle,²⁰ and give him some warning before running him down.²¹

(2) Walking, Playing, or Coasting upon Highway

As a general rule, children have the same right as adult pedestrians to use and traverse the public streets and highways, with respect to whether they are precluded by contributory negligence from recovering for an injury inflicted by a motor vehicle, and it is only required that they conform to the standard of care exacted of infants.

As a general rule, children have the same right as adult pedestrians to use and traverse the public streets and highways, with respect to whether they are contributorily negligent in so doing so as to bar recovery against the operator of a motor vehicle inflicting injury.²² So, a child has the right to walk along the highway on the side proper for pedestrians,²³ provided he exercises ordinary care to avoid injury by a motor vehicle,²⁴ but, if he violates regulations as to the side on which to walk, he may be guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.²⁵ It is not of itself negligence for a child to enter upon a street or highway for the purpose of crossing it,²⁶ but, if he is old enough to be charged with contributory negligence, he is obliged to use due care in crossing, and may be guilty of negligence in failing to use such care,²⁷

In action for injuries received by fourteen-year-old pedestrian when

as with respect to keeping a proper lookout,²⁸ or yielding the right of way when necessary.²⁹ However, the mere fact that a child could have seen the approaching automobile had he looked while crossing has been held not to be conclusive on the question of contributory negligence,³⁰ although it is a fact to be considered with the other circumstances of the case.³¹ The rule that a pedestrian who, without looking, steps suddenly into a street or highway from behind an obstruction is guilty of contributory negligence, as considered supra § 468, does not apply with the same strictness to a child.³² However, if a child suddenly darts in front of a motor vehicle, without such regard for the danger of his actions as may be reasonably expected of one of his age, he may be guilty of contributory negligence.³³

Playing in highway. It is not of itself improper for a child to play in the highway, so as to render him contributorily negligent with respect to an injury inflicted by a motor vehicle,³⁴ unless such use of the highway is prohibited by governmental regulation,³⁵ and it is only required that he conform to the standard of care generally imposed on infants to avoid injury by motor vehicles.³⁶ The failure of a child playing in the street to exercise due care to avoid injury by a motor vehicle may constitute contributory negligence,³⁷ but his failure to escape injury is not always conclusive evidence of negligence.³⁸

Coasting. Coasting by a child on a sled or wagon upon a public street or highway which is not put to an extended public use, where not expressly prohibited by governmental regulation, is not necessarily an unlawful act or a nuisance,³⁹ or negligence per se;⁴⁰ and a child who is free from contributory negligence while coasting is not precluded from recovery for injuries sustained through the negligent operation of a motor vehicle.⁴¹ However, where a child coasts upon a street or highway in violation of a regulation expressly prohibiting such conduct and is injured by a motor vehicle while so doing, he is struck by truck while crossing intersection on pedestrian crosswalk, court could not measure responsibility of pedestrian by precise timing of relative movements of truck and streetcars which were moving on street or by close calculation of time and space where the underlying facts were based on estimate and not measurements.—*Flowers v. generally precluded from a recovery because of his contributory negligence.⁴²

b. Recovery by Parent

The parents of a child injured by a motor vehicle may be precluded from recovery for their own benefit by reason of their contributory negligence in permitting the child to be upon the highway unattended; but this rule has no application where the child used due care for his own safety.

The parents of a child injured by a motor vehicle cannot recover in an action for their own benefit where they are guilty of contributory negligence in permitting the child to be upon the highway unattended.⁴³ It has been held, however, that a parent is not negligent as a matter of law in permitting his child to cross a street unattended,⁴⁴ and that ordinary care to protect the child from exposure to danger from motor vehicles is all that is required.⁴⁵ The rule that the parents may be barred from recovery because of their negligence in permitting the child to be upon the highway has no application where the child has not failed to use ordinary care to avoid injury,⁴⁶ or where the driver of the motor vehicle failed to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to the child after becoming aware of his peril.⁴⁷ Ordinarily a parent may not claim that, because the child was obedient and knew what due care required, the child used due care for his safety.⁴⁸

a. General Rules

A person riding as an occupant or guest in or on a motor vehicle driven by another must exercise reasonable or ordinary care for his own safety, and generally is chargeable with contributory negligence, barring a recovery, if his failure to exercise such care contributes proximately to his injuries.

A person riding as an occupant or nonpaying guest in or on a motor vehicle driven by another is not absolved from all personal care to avoid injury to himself,⁴⁹ but must exercise ordinary or reasonable care for his own safety, that is, such

Coaster unable to stop

Fact that coaster was unable to halt descent after beginning slide on city street where coasting was prohibited did not alter effect of coaster's negligence in coasting on such street as bar to recovery for injuries sustained in collision with automobile which was parked at time coaster started slide.—Shea v. Pillette, 189 A. 154, 108 Vt. 446, 109 A.L.R. 933 followed in 189 A. 159, 108 Vt. 457.

Proximate cause

Where boy who was skiing on street in violation of city ordinance when walking back across the street with his skis on was struck by automobile, his illegal act in skiing was so intimately connected with his injury as a proximate cause that as a matter of law he was barred from recovering for injuries based on motorist's negligence.—Reynolds v. Jacobucci, 58 N.E.2d 838, 317 Mass. 500.

of the driver being imputed to him.⁵³ The failure of the occupant to use ordinary care must contribute proximately to cause his injuries, otherwise he will not be barred from recovery therefor.⁵⁴ In any event, the occupant may recover from one whose negligence proximately caused the injury, if he himself was free from contributory negligence⁵⁵

Relaxation of rule

It has been held that the rule for contributory negligence as between the guest and the owner or operator of the motor vehicle in which he is riding is somewhat relaxed where he is injured through the negligent operation of another motor vehicle.—Lettieri v. Blaisden, 101 Pa.Super. 423.

Independent act

Act of adult guest in going to rear of automobile, that had been stopped on dangerous curve in violation of statute, to remove tire constituted independent negligent act for which host was not liable, even though guest acted at host's request, and precluded recovery from host for injuries sustained when struck by overtaking automobile.—Steiner v. Joint adventure. With respect to the contributory negligence of the occupant, in case of an injury through the negligence of the driver, the fact that they were engaged in a joint adventure is immaterial;⁵⁷ and even though they are engaged in such an adventure they owe each other the duty to exercise ordinary care.⁵⁸

b. Care of Occupant and of Driver Compared

An occupant is generally not held to the same degree of care and vigilance as is the driver of the motor vehicle.

The standard of duty of an occupant or nonpaying guest to exercise reasonable or ordinary care for his own safety is the same as that of the driver of the motor vehicle,⁵⁹ but the conduct required to fulfill that duty is ordinarily different because the circumstances are different;⁶⁰ and, accordingly, the precautions to be taken by the occupant or the degree of care and vigilance to be exercised by him is not as high as that required of the driver,⁶¹ taking into consideration the respective duties of the occupant or guest and of the driver.⁶² A statute requiring persons owning, operating, or controlling motor vehicles to exercise the highest degree of care has no application to a mere occupant of the vehicle.⁶³ The occupant is not held to the same degree of care with respect to the speed of the vehicle,⁶⁴ and, where the driver is in sole control of the vehicle, the negligence of the occupant must be determined by his conduct or omissions without regard to the driver's negligence⁶⁵ or the performance of the driver's duties.⁶⁶

c. What Constitutes Contributory Negligence in General

Whether or not the conduct of an occupant or guest in a motor vehicle constituted contributory negligence must be determined from the facts and circumstances of the particular case.

Among the circumstances to be considered in determining whether an occupant or guest has exercised due care, or, on the other hand, has been guilty of contributory negligence, are the experience and skill of the driver,⁶⁸ his physical condition,⁶⁹ the occupant's situation and duty under the circumstances existing at the time of the accident,⁷⁰ the apparent care which the driver was using,⁷¹ the condition of the motor vehicle,⁷² the time of the day or night,⁷³ the hazards of the road and travel,⁷⁴ the condition of the highway,⁷⁵ the weather conditions,⁷⁶ the amount of traffic,⁷⁷ the speed of the motor vehicle,⁷⁸ and the fact that the occupant was unaccustomed to motor vehicle travel and not apprehensive of danger.⁷⁹ Contributory negligence on the part of the occupant is not shown by the mere fact of injury or death caused by a collision,⁸⁰ or by the fact that the driver has been convicted of negligence,⁸¹ unless it is further shown that the occupant had the right to control the driver.⁸²

Intoxication of occupant. The fact that the occupant was intoxicated, or had been drinking intoxicating liquor, at the time of the injury does not of itself constitute contributory negligence which will preclude a recovery,⁸³ unless his intoxication

Guest injured by another motorist was not chargeable with contributory negligence in failing to perform host's duty to park on right side of highway, where neither host nor host's automobile was under guest's control.—Scory v. La Fave, supra.

Lack of knowledge

Where owner of automobile was too intoxicated to drive automobile and his friend helped him into the automobile which the friend proceeded

so incapacitated him that he was reckless or careless, and such want of care on his part contributed to bring about his injury.⁸⁴

Application to particular occupants. The duty of an occupant to exercise ordinary or reasonable care for his own safety, and of being chargeable with contributory negligence if he fails to do so, has been applied where injury or death has occurred to a bailor of a motor vehicle riding with bailor's agent, as driver,⁸⁵ a city employee riding in a city truck,⁸⁶ an employee assisting on a motor vehicle,⁸⁷ a minor riding with a parent,⁸⁸ a parent riding as occupant or guest with a child,⁸⁹ a passenger in a motor vehicle in a funeral procession,⁹⁰ a person climbing in and out of a motor vehicle,⁹¹ a wife riding with her husband,⁹² and a young or immature child riding as guest.⁹³ One voluntarily riding as a passenger on a fire engine during a test run must take greater precautions for his own safety than a passenger in an ordinary motor vehicle.⁹⁴

d. Knowledge of Danger and Opportunity to Act

An occupant or guest may be chargeable with contributory negligence where he knows, or by the exercise of ordinary care should know, of the danger which his acts or omissions involve, and has a reasonable opportunity to take steps to protect himself.

An occupant's acts or failure to act may constitute contributory negligence where, and only where, he knows and appreciates, or by the exercise of ordinary care should know and appreciate, the danger which his acts or omissions involve,⁹⁵ and has a

ed to drive, without knowledge or request of owner, the owner could not be held guilty of negligence in permitting himself to be driven by the friend, so as to preclude recovery for the death of the owner as result of collision which occurred while friend was driving—*Sanders v. reasonable opportunity to take steps necessary to protect himself and avert the accident,⁹⁶ as where he knows, or by ordinary care should know, that the driver is negligent in his operation of the motor vehicle,⁹⁷ or where he rides in a motor vehicle which he knows is defective in some part vital to its safe operation.⁹⁸ Contributory negligence, however, cannot be based on the guest's mere knowledge that the driver on former occasions has so driven his motor vehicle as to indicate that he is likely to drive recklessly.⁹⁹ With respect to the negligence of a third person, an occupant has been held to be responsible for his actual negligence in joining with his driver in testing a danger he knows to exist,¹ but a guest can be held guilty of contributory negligence only if his host is negligent.²

Acts in emergency. The rules relating to contributory negligence in the case of an emergency, discussed supra § 460, apply in determining an occupant's contributory negligence in an emergency,³ as, for instance, whether he is to be held guilty of contributory negligence in having interfered with the driver's control of the motor vehicle in the face of a sudden emergency.⁴

e. Control of Vehicle; Interfering with Driver

Whether or not the occupant has control over the driver's operation of the motor vehicle, or interferes with the driver in such operation, is an important fact to be considered in determining whether the occupant was guilty of contributory negligence.

Probably the most important circumstance to be considered in determining the care to be exercised by the occupant, or his contributory negligence, is the fact that ordinarily he has no control, supervision, or management over the driver's operation of the motor vehicle,⁵ and, except where the occupant

Operator possessing permit

The facts that the guest is a licensed driver and the actual operator of the motor vehicle is driving only by permit do not give the guest control over the car's actual opera-

is the owner of the vehicle,⁶ he generally is under no duty to assume active physical control or supervision over such operation⁷ or to make suggestions as to the management of the vehicle.⁸ The occupant, however, should make an effort to control the operation of the vehicle in the face of known or obvious dangers,⁹ and where it is obvious that the driver is not taking precautions for their safety,¹⁰ and in such a case the occupant may not be negligent in taking the wheel and swerving the car to avoid a collision with another car approaching on the wrong side of the road.¹¹

Interference. An occupant usually is chargeable with contributory negligence, if he interferes with a competent driver's control of the operation of the motor vehicle,¹² such as by grabbing the steering wheel¹³ or by diverting the driver's attention from his duties as driver.¹⁴ A warning should not be given in such a manner as to divert the driver's attention from the road.¹⁵

f. Gross Negligence; Willful or Wanton Conduct

Under the so-called guest statutes, contributory negligence on the part of the occupant will not be considered unless it consists of gross negligence or willful or wanton conduct.

Under a so-called guest statute, providing that the owner or operator of a motor vehicle shall not be liable for injuries to a nonpaying guest, except in the case of gross negligence or willful or wanton misconduct, discussed generally supra § 399, contributory negligence of such a guest is not an element to be considered or dealt with as a defense to an action for injuries caused by defendant's gross negligence or willful or wanton conduct¹⁶ except where the guest's contributory negligence itself consists of gross negligence or willful or wanton conduct.¹⁷ In an action by an occupant against a driver for willful or wanton misconduct, the fact that the occupant was also guilty of such misconduct constitutes a defense.¹⁸ It has been held that the Merely carrying on a conversation with the driver was not contributory negligence.—Sweeney v. New Orleans Public Service, La.App., 184 So. 740.

G. Assumption of Risk

- (1) General rules
- (2) Condition of vehicle

(1) General Rules

An occupant of a motor vehicle, as an invited or permissive guest, assumes the risk, as between himself and his host, of injury from known or obvious dangers or hazards incident to the ordinary operation of the vehicle.

Although the relation of guest and driver is not contractual, it is consensual, and because of its consensual character, it is generally subject to the rules relating to assumption of risk,²⁰ although there is also authority to the contrary.²¹ There are three elements of the doctrine of assumption of risk: (1) A hazard or danger inconsistent with the safety of the occupant. (2) Knowledge or appreciation of the hazard by the occupant. (3) Acquiescence or a willingness to proceed in the face of the danger.²²

Under this doctrine an occupant or guest in a motor vehicle, whether invited or permissive, voluntarily assumes the risk of injuries from known or obvious dangers or hazards incident to the ordinary operation of the vehicle,²³ and, therefore, cannot recover for injuries resulting therefrom.²⁴ He assumes all the ordinary risks of injury incident to travel in a motor vehicle²⁵ controlled by a reasonably prudent driver.²⁶ The risk which the occupant may be held to have assumed may arise from the condition of the weather,²⁷ driving on a much-traveled highway at night without lights,²⁸ the icy condition of the streets or highways,²⁹ the purpose and character of the trip in the motor vehicle,³⁰ rid-

Going to football game

Where plaintiff, with others, rode as a guest to a football game in defendant's motor vehicle, and the time within which the trip was to be made was known to all parties, and no suggestion was made at any time

ing in the back seat,³¹ or the necessity of making a detour.³² An occupant does not assume the risk of a hazard or danger of which he has no knowledge or appreciation.³³ A guest of a police officer driving a motor vehicle does not assume the risk of a collision with another vehicle while assisting the officer to overtake a speeding traffic violator.³⁴

Under a so-called guest statute, assumption of risk has been held to be available as an affirmative defense to an action by a guest to recover for injuries sustained as a result of the willful or wanton conduct of the driver,³⁵ particularly if the guest has been guilty of the same kind of misconduct that constitutes the gross negligence of his host.³⁶

Doctrine available only as to host. A guest's assumption of risk, in case of a motor vehicle collision, applies only as between the guest and his host,³⁷ and does not bar recovery from a third person for injuries to which the third person's negligence proximately contributed,³⁸ unless the acts of the host, in which the guest acquiesces, operate as the cause of the collision.³⁹

Contributory negligence distinguished. An occupant's assumption of risk is distinct from any question of his contributory negligence,⁴⁰ and in determining the fact of the host's nonliability for the occupant's injuries on the theory of assumption of risk the fact that the occupant was not guilty of contributory negligence is immaterial.⁴¹

(2) Condition of Vehicle

A person who accepts a gratuitous ride in a motor vehicle assumes the risk of injury from any defect inherent in the vehicle except as to a defect known to the driver and not known or patent to the occupant.

The characteristics of a motor vehicle may be supposed to be within the contemplation of a guest when he accepts an invitation to ride therein,⁴² and, accordingly, one who accepts a gratuitous ride in a motor vehicle accepts the vehicle as he finds it, and assumes the risk of injury from any defect inherent in the vehicle,⁴³ except with respect to any-that defendant was driving improperly, and the car was in good condition, plaintiff assumed the risk of injury, where the car toppled over as a result of an attempt to make an unexpected turn at too high a rate of speed.—Brockhaus v. Neuman, 238 N.W. 477, 201 Wis. 57.

Riding to fire

If guests in automobile, riding to fire, should have anticipated some accident would be sustained because of character of trip, it was unnecessary that they should anticipate happening of particular accident.—Sommerfeld v. Flury, 223 N.W. 408, 198 Wis. 163.

- a. In general
- b. Assumption of risk

a. In General

An occupant of a motor vehicle ordinarily may rely, within reasonable limits, on the assumption that his driver, and others on the highway, will exercise reasonable care to avoid danger; but this does not justify the occupant in intrusting his safety absolutely to the driver.

In the absence of any fact or circumstance indicating that the driver is incompetent or careless, an occupant or guest in a motor vehicle ordinarily has the right to rely on the assumption, within reasonable limits, that the driver possesses skill and judgment and, in the operation of the motor vehicle, will exercise reasonable care and vigilance to avoid danger,⁴⁵ especially where the guest is seated on the back seat.⁴⁶ In accordance with this rule, unless the danger is known or obvious, an occupant is not required to anticipate negligence on the part of the driver,⁴⁷ and is not guilty of contributory negligence if, in reliance on the skill and due care of the driver, he does not take active steps to see that the vehicle is properly operated.⁴⁸

In the absence of any fact or circumstance indicating the contrary, an occupant need not anticipate that the driver, who has exclusive control and management of the vehicle, will enter a sphere of danger,⁴⁹ will omit to exercise proper care to observe the approach of other vehicles,⁵⁰ or fail to keep the speed of the vehicle within proper limits,⁵¹ or violate the law of the road,⁵² or otherwise improperly increase the ordinary risks or dangers of travel on the public highway.⁵³ An occupant may also rely on the assumption that the driver can control his car within a reasonable distance of an obstruction to which his attention is called.⁵⁴

An occupant of a motor vehicle, however, may not abandon the exercise of his own faculties and intrust his safety absolutely to the driver, regardless of the imminence of danger, or the visible lack of ordinary care on the part of the driver to avoid harm,⁵⁵ and if the occupant knows, or by the exer-

Persons other than occupant's driver. A motor vehicle occupant may also rely on the assumption, until the contrary appears, that other motorists will operate their motor vehicles with reasonable or ordinary care,⁵⁸ and comply with highway regulations,⁵⁹ such as that they will obey the law of the road,⁶⁰ will signal the approach of the vehicles which they are driving,⁶¹ or will observe intersec-

b. Assumption of Risk

An occupant or guest in a motor vehicle assumes the risk of injury incident to the driver's skill, competency, or judgment in operating the vehicle.

A guest, in entering the motor vehicle of his host, accepts the driver with his known habits of driving⁶⁴ with such skill, competency, and judgment in operating motor vehicles as he actually possesses, and assumes the risk of injury incident to the driver's unskillfulness or error in judgment in the management and control of the vehicle,⁶⁵ and the

§ 488. Duty to Observe and Warn of Danger

- a. In general
- b. Occupant sleeping
- c. Compared with vigilance of driver
- d. Assumption of risk

a. In General

An occupant or guest in a motor vehicle is not under an absolute duty to discover and warn the driver of approaching vehicles or other dangers, and ordinarily is not required to keep a constant lookout for this purpose. The extent of his duty is to exercise reasonable care, depending on the circumstances, to discover and warn the driver of known or obvious dangers.

"In the fact that a physician, who was accustomed to being disturbed and making visits at all hours of the night, had secured only three and one half hours of sleep the preceding night, there was nothing to charge . . . [the occupant] with knowledge or notice of probable dangers resulting from the negligent driving of the automobile by him while in a state of drowsiness or sleep."—Gower v. Strain, supra.

Since an occupant of a motor vehicle may rely, to a limited extent, on the assumption that the driver will exercise proper care and caution, as discussed supra § 487, the occupant's or guest's duty to warn him usually does not arise until some fact or circumstance out of the usual and ordinary is presented.⁷⁴ An occupant cannot be held to an absolute duty, in every case and under all circumstances, to use his senses in order to discover approaching vehicles or other dangers⁷⁵ or to warn the driver or give him directions concerning such dangers,⁷⁶ and his failure to discover a danger or to warn the driver thereof in time to avert an accident does not necessarily constitute contributory negligence.⁷⁷ Ordinarily an occupant or guest is not required to be constantly on the lookout for any unexpected danger or sudden emergency that may arise,⁷⁸ where there is nothing to indicate that the driver is incompetent or that he is not driving in a careful manner,⁷⁹ and a guest or occupant has been held not to be responsible for mere inaction in failing to discover dangers of which he is ignorant, but which might have been discovered had he been giving his attention to the roadway ahead of him.⁸⁰

The extent of the occupant's duty is to exercise reasonable or ordinary care and caution, depending on the circumstances existing at the time of the accident, to look out for approaching vehicles or other dangers,⁸¹ and to warn the driver of dangers or threatened dangers, apparently not observed or

Similar statement of rule

Automobile occupant was only required to see approaching automobile, realize the danger and warn driver of automobile in which occupant was riding of the danger if a reasonably careful and prudent person under the same or similar circumstances would have seen the automobile, realized the danger, and given warning thereof.—Lindley v. Sink, 30 N.E.2d 456, 218 Ind. 1.

It is only where driver is acting in careless manner, or is approaching danger which is known to guest and unknown to driver, that duty devolves on guest to warn driver.—State, for Use of Shipley, v. Lupton, 161 A. 393, 163 Md. 180.

A guest's primary duty, in the avoidance of accidents, is to warn the driver of the existence or sudden appearance of unexpected obstacles and hazards.—Cassar v. Mansfield Lumber Co., La.App., 35 So.2d 797.

Danger to own safety

(Guest, having absolutely no control over operation of automobile, merely had duty to notify driver if observing anything which endangered guest's safety.)—Cate v. Fresno Traction Co., 2 P.2d 364, 213 Cal. 190.

equal opportunity with the driver to observe the dangerous conditions and circumstances;⁸⁴ and if he fails in any of these respects he may be chargeable with contributory negligence, precluding a recovery,⁸⁵ provided, of course, such failure contributes proximately to cause his injury.⁸⁶

A guest, however, is not required to warn the driver where the situation is such that a reason-

at an excessive rate of speed.²

The fact that the motor vehicle was approaching an intersection is also a circumstance to be considered in determining the guest's duty, and contributory negligence, with respect to observing and warning the driver of unexpected dangers,³ such as with respect to a vehicle approaching on an intersecting street or highway,⁴ except where the intersection was protected by traffic lights.⁵

b. Occupant Sleeping

The fact that a guest in a motor vehicle closes his eyes or falls asleep does not necessarily constitute contributory negligence.

The fact that a guest in a motor vehicle closes his eyes, at a time when there is no indication of danger,⁶ or the fact that the guest dozes or is asleep at the time of the accident⁷ does not necessarily constitute contributory negligence unless there is a causal connection between the fact that the guest is asleep and the accident.⁸ The fact of the guest being asleep at the time of the accident is merely one of the circumstances to be considered in connection with other surrounding circumstances,⁹ and, when so considered, may constitute contributory negligence,¹⁰ as where he goes to sleep knowing of an impending peril or hazard in the driver's operation of the vehicle,¹¹ or may not constitute contributory negligence,¹² as where there is no indication of danger¹³ or nothing to indicate that, if awake, he could have helped to prevent the accident.¹⁴

A guest ordinarily is under no duty to stay awake to guard his safety against intentional injuries inflicted on him by anyone,¹⁵ or to guard against gross negligence of the driver.¹⁶ However, it has also been held that a guest who is injured while asleep is guilty of such negligence as will preclude a recovery, notwithstanding gross negligence on the part of the driver.¹⁷

c. Compared with Vigilance of Driver

A guest in a motor vehicle ordinarily is not held to as high a degree of care and vigilance in keeping a lookout as is the driver of the vehicle.

Since a guest ordinarily has no control over the driver's operation of the motor vehicle, ordinarily he is not held to as high a degree of care and vigilance in keeping a lookout and listening for unexpected dangers or sudden emergencies as is the driver of the vehicle¹⁸ unless they are engaged in a mutual adventure, in which case the guest has the same duty as the driver to observe dangers.¹⁹

Owner as occupant. An owner riding in his own automobile driven by another is bound to the same degree of care as to looking out as is the driver, if the driver is acting for and on behalf of the owner in the operation of the automobile,²⁰ or if the owner has not yielded to the driver a right of possession or control of the manner in which the automobile is being driven.²¹

As a general rule a guest does not assume the risk of injury incident to the driver's failure to keep a proper lookout.

As a general rule a guest does not assume the risk of injury incident to the driver's failure to maintain a proper lookout,²² particularly where the want of lookout by the driver is merely momentary.²³ A guest, however, having knowledge of the driver's negligence with respect to keeping a lookout, and an opportunity to protest or object thereto, will be deemed to have assumed the risk of such negligence

so as to bar a recovery for injuries thereby sustained.²⁴

§ 489. Duty to Protest Negligence or Unlawful Act of Driver

- a. In general
- b. Continuation of protests
- c. Assumption of risk

a. In General

An occupant in a motor vehicle is not under an absolute duty to protest against the negligent or unlawful acts of the driver in operating the vehicle; but the extent of such duty depends on what a person of ordinary prudence would do under the same or similar circumstances.

The duty of a guest in a motor vehicle, to protest or remonstrate against the negligent or unlawful acts of the driver,²⁵ such as against his driving at an excessive or unlawful rate of speed,²⁶ is not an absolute or positive duty; and, since the guest ordinarily has the right to assume that the driver knows how to operate the motor vehicle and is driving it properly, as discussed supra § 487, a failure

Duties compared

A driver must use care constantly in keeping a lookout while driving on public highway, whereas ordinarily guests may reasonably and lawfully rely on driver to keep watch.

N.H.—Lafamme v. Lewis, 192 A. 861, 89 N.H. 69.

The law imposes no duty on guest in automobile to remonstrate against speed at which it is driven, in absence of facts suggesting necessity to watch speed.—Powers v. State, for Use and Benefit of Reynolds, 11 A.2d 909, 178 Md. 23.

to protest or remonstrate with the driver as to his manner of driving, at the time or immediately before an accident, ordinarily does not of itself constitute contributory negligence.²⁷ The extent of an occupant's or guest's duty to protest depends on the facts and circumstances of the particular case, that is, on what a person of ordinary prudence would do, under the same or similar circumstances, with respect to protesting against the excessive or unlawful rate of speed,²⁸ or other negligent or unlawful acts or conduct on the part of the driver.²⁹

Accordingly, if an occupant or guest in a motor vehicle knows, or in the exercise of ordinary care should know, that the driver is conducting himself in the operation of the vehicle in a negligent or unlawful manner, and, if under the same or similar circumstances a reasonably prudent person would have attempted to persuade the driver from such conduct, by protest, or other warning, he is guilty of contributory negligence if, a reasonable opportunity therefor being afforded, he fails to do so and such failure contributed proximately to cause his injury;³⁰ but in order for failure to protest, or

Circumstances to be considered

In determining duty of automobile guest to protest, the circumstances of time, duration of negligence, conduct, reaction of driver to complaint, character of negligence, and the like must be considered—Apfelbaum v. Markley, 3 A.2d 975, 134 Pa.Super. 392.

If guest saw, or ought to have seen, traffic signal on right of highway, and noticed that driver was continuing as though he had not seen it, guest had plain duty to protest.—Teas v. Eisenlord, 253 N.W. 795, 215 Wis. 455.

Defective steering apparatus

Where fact that steering apparatus was faulty was known to both host and guest, and automobile was being driven at excessive speed, guest who suggested that they stop and inspect the steering apparatus but did not protest against proceeding further was guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery for injuries sustained in accident which occurred when host lost control of automobile.—Ellenberger v. Kramer, 186 A. 809, 322 Pa. 589.

guilty of contributory negligence in failing to protest or remonstrate against the vehicle's being driven at an excessive, dangerous, or unlawful rate of speed,³⁸ or into a situation of danger,³⁹ or in any other negligent or unlawful manner,⁴⁰ where he did not know, or in the exercise of ordinary care should not have known and appreciated, that the vehicle was being so driven,⁴¹ or where a reasonably prudent person in the same or similar circumstances would not have protested,⁴² or where his failure to do so did not contribute proximately to cause his injury.⁴³ Moreover, the duty of an occupant or guest to protest as to the driver's negligence or unlawful acts exists only where it will serve some useful purpose.⁴⁴ There is no contributory negligence on the part of one riding in a motor vehicle as a guest who observes approaching danger and at once gives warning, because the driver does not heed the warning but goes ahead into obvious peril, which the guest is powerless to prevent or avoid,⁴⁵ or where it reasonably appears that a protest would go unheeded,⁴⁶ or where, by reason of the danger not becoming apparent and appreciated in time to affect the driver's conduct and avert the accident, the occupant had no reasonable opportunity to protest or remonstrate,⁴⁷ or where

Demand to stop

Where guest and host both saw truck approaching intersection seventy-five feet away and both thought it safe for automobile to proceed and danger did not become apparent until automobile had entered intersection, there was no contributory negligence by guest in not directing host to stop so as to bar recovery against owner of truck.—Wilson v. Oscar H. Kjolrie Co., 12 N.W.2d 526, 73 N.D. 134.

Inability to stop on icy pavement

Where road appeared dry, and driver was not exceeding speed which would be legal if road were dry, there was no occasion for guest to protest the manner of driving, and hence guest was not barred by contributory negligence for recovering for injuries suffered when driver was unable to stop on icy pavement in time to avoid parked truck.—Engel v. Interstate Transit Co., 115 P.2d 681, 9 Wash.2d 590.

from the conduct of the occupant it may be reasonably inferred that he had not acquiesced in the negligent conduct of the driver.⁴⁸

b. Continuation of Protests

If a guest protests to the driver as to particular negligent acts or conduct, he is generally not required to protest further, unless the first protest is not heeded. If there are several guests in the vehicle, an audible protest by one of them is generally sufficient.

If a guest protests and cautions the driver with respect to particular negligent acts, he generally performs his full duty as to such acts.⁴⁹ If in response to such protest the driver replies that he will watch out and be careful, the guest may assume that he will act in accordance with his reply,⁵⁰ and, if thereafter the driver drives in a more prudent manner, it is generally not incumbent on the guest to complain or protest further.⁵¹ If, however, the first protest is not heeded, other protests should be made as the occasion requires.⁵² A guest is not required to suggest slowing down of the motor vehicle each time it overtakes another vehicle;⁵³ nor need he protest against every incautious or imprudent act of the driver,⁵⁴ or keep remonstrating, interfering, or instructing the driver as to the operation of the vehicle.⁵⁵ Where the driver was warned as to the speed of the car as it approached the place of the accident, its excessive speed elsewhere on the journey is immaterial with respect to the guest's contributory negligence in not protesting throughout the journey.⁵⁶

If there are several guests in the motor vehicle, it is unnecessary for all of them to protest or caution the driver, if any one of them protested, and the others heard it.⁵⁷

c. Assumption of Risk

If a guest, with knowledge of the facts, acquiesces, without protest or remonstrance, in the negligent or unlawful manner in which the driver operates the motor vehicle, the guest generally will be deemed to assume the risk of injury incident to such operation, and cannot recover therefor as against the host.

If a guest in a motor vehicle, with knowledge of the facts, acquiesces, without protest or remonstrance, in the negligent or unlawful manner in which the driver operates the vehicle, the guest will be deemed to assume the risk of injury incident to such operation, and cannot recover therefor, as against the host,⁵⁸ as where he knowingly acquiesces, until it is too late to protest, in the operation of the motor vehicle at an excessive or un-

Sluggishness

If automobile accident was caused by driver's weariness and resulting sluggishness in management and control of automobile, guests would be barred from recovery for injuries sustained on ground of driver's negligence, where guests assumed risk of any injury resulting from weariness.—Storlie v. lawful rate of speed,⁵⁹ or in violation of the law of the road,⁶⁰ or where he acquiesces in the parking of the vehicle on the left shoulder of the highway,⁶¹ and in the turning on of the bright lights of a vehicle so parked.⁶² A guest, however, will be deemed to have assumed the risk incident to a negligent or unlawful course of driving, only where it has persisted long enough to give him an opportunity to protest and indicate his dissent or disapproval of the negligent or reckless manner of driving.⁶³ If the driver heeds such a protest and discontinues the protested course of driving, the guest will not, by reason of such previous improper driving, be considered as acquiescing in subsequent improper driving, so as to render assumption of risk applicable.⁶⁴

Extent of risks assumed. If the guest assumes the risk incident to the driver's negligence, he also assumes the risk involved in an emergency caused by such negligence,⁶⁵ such as ensuing collision with another vehicle, of which collision the driver's negligence is the primary cause.⁶⁶

Jesse, 207 N.W. 706, 189 Wis. 652, followed in 207 N.W. 708, 189 Wis. 659.

Reason for rule

"There is an increasing tendency to designate this failure to protest as contributory negligence. It is not strictly contributory negligence. The duty to protest grows out of the relation of host and guest, and it constitutes an essential element in the question of whether the guest may recover damages resulting from the negligence of the host. . . . Where this results with the acquiescence of the guest, the guest is not permitted to recover from the host. This is not because the guest is, strictly speaking, guilty of contributory negligence, or any negligence, but rather because the guest has acquiesced in the conduct of the host, and it would be against reason and justice to permit a recovery against the host under such circumstances."—Haines v. Duffy, 240 N.W. 152, 153, 206 Wis. 193.

Remark held not acquiescence

Where guest asked host to decrease speed, and host replied that they should hurry, that his wife could drive on return trip and they could sleep on rear seat, statement of guest that, "That part is sure fine, I wouldn't mind a little sleep now," was not a consent to manner in which automobile was driven so as to relieve host from liability for willful misconduct.—Wright v. Sellers, 78 P. 2d 209, 25 Cal.App.2d 603.

A wife who knew that her husband was a fast driver and had cautioned him many times about driving too fast but who voluntarily entered automobile as guest and accepted benefits to be derived therefrom knowing of the danger, assumed the risk of her husband's known habit and could not base right to recover from husband for injuries sustained in collision on alleged negligence of husband in driving too fast, notwithstanding her previous protests as to speed on evening of accident.—Bourestom v. Where guest assumed risk of host's parking on left shoulder of highway, and host's negligence in so parking could not be separated from host's subsequent turning on of lights at such place, guest also assumed risk of any increase in danger resulting from such turning on of lights as far as action against host was concerned.—Scory v. Anticipation of resumption of dangerous driving

When protest against driving at an excessive rate of speed under dangerous conditions results in stopping the automobile and indication of a willingness to drive more carefully, it cannot be said that the guest must anticipate a resumption of the dangerous driving.—Ridgway v. Yenny, 57 N.E.2d 581, 223 Ind. 16.

Reason for rule

"If a host is proceeding at a negligent rate of speed, which the guest assumes, and by reason of this speed finds himself in a situation requiring instant decision and giving him opportunity for further negligence with respect to control, it is impossible to isolate the subsequent negligence from the prior negligence and to hold in spite of the fact that the guest has acquiesced in the former, that the momentary character of the latter makes acquiescence impossible."—Young v. protest, previously made at a point some distance from the place of the accident, does not constitute acquiescence and assumption of risk at the latter place.⁶⁷

§ 490. Riding in Dangerous or Improper Place or Position

- a. In general
- b. Riding on running board or platform
- c. Overcrowding or overloading
- d. Assumption of risk

a. In General

An occupant may be charged with contributory negligence in knowingly riding in a dangerous or improper place or position in or on a motor vehicle, without a reasonable necessity or excuse therefor, although the circumstances may be such that his conduct in riding in such a place or position will not preclude a recovery for injuries sustained.

An occupant of a motor vehicle who, without some reasonable necessity or excuse, rides in a place or position which he knows, or in the exercise of ordinary care should know, exposes him to danger, is ordinarily guilty of contributory negligence if such conduct contributes proximately to cause his injuries,⁶⁸ and the fact that the driver knowingly permits the occupant to ride in a dangerous place or position does not waive the occupant's contributory negligence in so riding.⁶⁹ The mere fact, however, that an occupant rides in an unusual or improper place or position, even though he is not required to do so, does not necessarily constitute contributory negligence,⁷⁰ but depends on the facts and circumstances of the particular case, and on what a person of ordinary prudence would do under the same or similar circumstances.⁷¹ A guest riding in an unusual or improper place or position is not guilty of contributory negligence, where he has no reasonable cause to believe that the place or position in which he is riding is any more dangerous than another place or position on the vehicle,⁷² or where the nature of the danger or accident is such as he is not bound to anticipate,⁷³ or where his conduct in so riding does not proximately contribute to cause his injury,⁷⁴ as where his position on the vehicle is simply a condi-

Remarks held not withdrawal of protest

Where guest had protested to excessive speed, and host stated that host was a good driver and knew the road, guest's reply of, "Maybe so," was not a withdrawal of guest's protest so that guest thereby assumed risks incident to the speed, especially in view of fact that guest's remark was made at a point several miles from scene of accident.—Wright v. Riding in ambulance

Where plaintiff with the consent of ambulance driver entered ambulance to administer to sick man during course of trip, and was injured when side door of ambulance sprang open either because of pressure of plaintiff's body resting against it as he placed his arm outside of the window or because of the pressure of plaintiff's knee resting against the inside door lever or handle, plaintiff could not recover for injuries, since in either instance he was contributorily negligent.—Rushing v. Dislodged cargo

Boys sleeping with heads in open window of school bus in which they were riding as paying passengers were not guilty of contributory negligence proximately causing their death when their heads were struck by cases dislodged from loaded truck when bus was sideswiped by truck, since boys had right to assume that driver of bus and drivers of approaching vehicles would stay on right side of road.—Smith v. tion of the occurrence of the accident, and not the real cause thereof.⁷⁵ A guest's conduct in riding in a dangerous place or position, despite the host's warnings and requests that he ride elsewhere, does not relieve the host of liability for any reckless disregard of the guest's rights in the operation of the vehicle.⁷⁶

Under statute. Under some statutes and ordinances, a guest on a motor vehicle is guilty of negligence per se if he rides in a place or position prohibited by the statute or ordinance,⁷⁷ such as on a fender of the vehicle.⁷⁸ A guest is chargeable with contributory negligence, precluding a recovery, in riding on the rear bumper, in violation of a statute prohibiting any person from riding on the rear of a vehicle without the driver's consent;⁷⁹ but such a statute is not violated, so as to preclude a recovery, by an occupant riding on the running board.⁸⁰ Under a statute prohibiting any person from hanging onto, or riding on, the outside or rear of any vehicle, a person so riding, without the invitation or consent of the driver, is regarded as a trespasser and is precluded from recovering for injuries thereby sustained;⁸¹ but such a statute does not prevent a recovery by one riding, in violation of the statute, with the consent of the driver, and, therefore, as a licensee rather than a trespasser.⁸²

sion with a motor vehicle while riding with another on a one-seated motorcycle, and with nothing on which to hold, has been held to be guilty of contributory negligence.⁸³ An ordinance prohibiting a person from riding on the handle bar, frame, or tank of a motorcycle or bicycle, is not applicable to show contributory negligence of a person riding on the single seat of a motor scooter immediately behind the driver, since the method of riding so employed is not prohibited by the ordinance.⁸⁴

b. Riding on Running Board or Platform

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a person riding on the running board of a motor vehicle is not necessarily negligent, but such conduct may constitute contributory negligence under the facts and circumstances of the particular case.

In the absence of statute, a guest is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence, precluding a recovery, in riding on the running board or platform of a motor vehicle,⁸⁵ but whether such conduct constitutes contributory negligence depends on the particular facts, and on what a person of ordinary prudence would do under the same or similar circumstances,⁸⁶ and on whether such conduct was a contributing cause of the injury.⁸⁷ Accordingly it may, under particular circumstances, constitute contributory negligence, precluding a recovery, for a guest to ride on the running board, without any reason or necessity therefor,⁸⁸ or he may be guilty of such negligence in riding on the left running board,⁸⁹ or in standing on the running board⁹⁰ or an open platform,⁹¹ or it may constitute negligence for a policeman to ride on the running board while directing the operation of the motor vehicle,⁹² where he is not confronted with an emergency which requires him to do more than give directions.⁹³ A guest, however, riding on the running board or platform has the right to assume that the driver will operate the motor vehicle with due care for his safety, and is not required to anticipate negligence on the part of the driver.⁹⁴

Under some statutes it is negligence per se for an occupant of a motor vehicle to ride on the running board,⁹⁵ but that circumstance alone is not sufficient to establish contributory negligence, so as to preclude a recovery for injuries sustained.⁹⁶

c. Overcrowding or Overloading

A guest in a motor vehicle is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence in sitting in the front seat with two or more other persons, but such conduct may constitute contributory negligence if the overcrowding restricts the driver's freedom of action in operating the vehicle and in exercising necessary control in an emergency.

A guest in a motor vehicle is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence, precluding a recovery, in sitting in the front seat with two or more other persons,⁹⁷ even though such conduct is unlawful;⁹⁸ but whether it does constitute contributory negligence depends on the particular facts and circumstances,⁹⁹ and whether it is a contributing cause of the accident.¹ If such overcrowding restricts the driver's freedom of action in operating the vehicle and in exercising necessary control in an emergency, a guest taking part in the overcrowding is generally guilty of contributory negligence, precluding a recovery,² even though, because of his age, knowledge, and experience he could not have known of the hazard created by his presence on the overcrowded seat.³

d. Assumption of Risk

A guest riding in a dangerous or improper place or position assumes the risk of injury incident to the ordinary operation of the motor vehicle.

Remote cause

Contributory negligence, if any, of plaintiff standing on left running board of stationary truck which was upon extreme right of center of highway, who was injured when defendant's automobile collided with truck, was too remote in chain of causation to constitute a defense, and, if negligence at all, was a mere condition on which defendant's negligence operated as an efficient cause, without which the injury would not have happened.—*Oakman v. A guest riding in a dangerous or improper place or position ordinarily assumes the risk of injury incident to the insecurity of his position from the ordinary operation of the motor vehicle,⁴ and such assumption includes such negligence as can be reasonably considered as being included in the risk to which the guest's position exposes him,⁵ and also negligence of which he is aware, and against which he does not protest.⁶ The guest, however, does not assume a risk which is occasioned by unanticipated negligence or recklessness in the operation of the vehicle,⁷ or by the driver's willful misconduct after the guest's presence is discovered,⁸ nor does he assume the risk of danger involved in the reckless, careless, and negligent driving of another vehicle which comes in collision with the vehicle in which he is riding.⁹ A boy riding with another on a one-seated motorcycle with nothing on which to hold assumes the responsibility for any injury to which his dangerous position presumably contributes.¹⁰

§ 491. Duty to Leave Vehicle

- a. In general
- b. Assumption of risk

a. In General

A guest may be guilty of contributory negligence in failing to leave the motor vehicle, at a favorable opportunity, when he knows, or should know, that it is dangerous to remain therein any longer.

If an occupant of a motor vehicle knows, or in the exercise of ordinary care should know, that to remain longer in the vehicle is dangerous, and if under the same or similar circumstances a reasonably prudent person would leave or withdraw from the vehicle, he is guilty of contributory negligence if, a reasonable opportunity therefor being afforded, he fails to do so, and such failure contributes proximately to cause his injury.¹¹ An occupant may be guilty of contributory negligence, precluding a recovery, in failing to withdraw from a motor vehicle where the driver persists, despite protests and warnings, in operating the vehicle at a dangerous or unlawful rate of speed,¹² or in a reck-

Extent of assumption

One who accepts an invitation to ride on the running board of a car to a certain point assumes the risk of his position, not only as far as the specified point but to any farther point.—Fritz v. Smith, 46 Pa.Dist. & Co. 269.

On fire engine

One voluntarily assuming dangerous position of passenger on fire engine during test run assumed risk ordinarily incident to that dangerous position.—Grassie v. American La France Fire Engine Co., 272 P. 1073, 95 Cal.App. 384.

One riding on flange of stone spreader towed by truck assumed risks of injuries from jars or jerks when spreader struck objects protruding only one or two inches above ground, so as to bar recovery of damages from truck owner for such rider's death from injuries sustained when dislodged by jar as result of spreader striking manhole cover.—Wunsch v. Colonial Sand & Stone Co., 12 N.Y.S.2d 488, 257 App.Div. 857.

Indemnity Co., 6 N.W.2d 644, 241 Wis. 568.

Failure to protest negligence as assumption of risk generally see supra § 489.

Standing up in car

Such an assumption of negligence is not avoided by the fact that the guest voluntarily stood up and faced the rear to fix the back seat at which time he was thrown to the floor when the driver of the automobile was forced to make an abrupt stop in order to avoid collision with the automobile ahead.—Schneider v. American Indemnity Co., supra.

Where guest riding on platform of truck died as result of fall from truck and only negligence that could be charged against driver was that his judgment had been impaired by drinking and that he maintained a too high rate of speed in view of bad condition of road, but guest assumed risk in that he placed himself on platform of truck as a matter of choice and made no protest against the speed maintained, and had participated in the drinking, no recovery could be had against insurer of owner of truck because of negligent operation.—Nordahl v. Farmers Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 27 N.W.2d 707, 250 Wis. 609.

less or negligent manner,¹³ such as in driving without sufficient lights at night,¹⁴ in driving into a situation of danger without taking proper care,¹⁵ or in remaining in the vehicle with knowledge that it is illegally parked,¹⁶ or that there is a dangerous defect in the car.¹⁷ A guest may be negligent in jumping off the vehicle, on the negligent command of the driver, if no character of coercion or fright was produced by the command.¹⁸

On the other hand, it is not the duty of a guest, under all circumstances of reckless or negligent driving, to ask to be let out;¹⁹ and he is not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to quit the vehicle where he has no knowledge, and is not chargeable with knowledge, that to remain longer is dangerous,²⁰ or where a reasonably prudent person in the same or similar circumstances would not have withdrawn from the vehicle,²¹ as where leaving the vehicle would involve exposure to other and perhaps greater risks;²² nor is he contributorily negligent in failing to leave the vehicle where he has no reasonable opportunity to do so.²³ It has been held that, if the guest was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to leave the vehicle before the accident happened, the proximate cause of the accident is immaterial.²⁴

A guest assumes the risk of further negligent or reckless driving, if, after protesting against the negligent or reckless manner in which the motor vehicle is being operated, he fails to leave the vehicle when a favorable opportunity to do so is presented.

If a guest, after protesting against the negligent or reckless manner in which the motor vehicle is being operated, fails to leave the vehicle when a favorable opportunity to do so is presented, he assumes the risk of injury from further negligent or reckless driving;²⁵ but the assumption does not ap-

§ 492. Riding with Reckless, Inexperienced, or Intoxicated Driver

- a. In general
- b. Assumption of risk

a. In General

An occupant who knows, or by the exercise of ordinary care should know, that he is being driven by a reckless, inexperienced, incompetent, or intoxicated driver may be guilty of contributory negligence if he fails to use ordinary care to protect himself from harm.

An occupant of a motor vehicle who knows, or in the exercise of ordinary care should know, that he is being driven by a reckless, inexperienced, incompetent, or intoxicated person may be guilty of contributory negligence if he fails to take such steps to protect himself from harm as a reasonably prudent person would take under the same or similar circumstances.²⁷ An occupant may be guilty of contributory negligence in riding or continuing to ride with a driver of known imprudence, carelessness, or recklessness,²⁸ or with a driver who is unable to operate the vehicle with proper caution or skill because of incompetency or inexperience,²⁹ or because of his drowsy mental condition;³⁰ and a guest or occupant may be guilty of contributory negligence in failing to require the driver to turn the management of the vehicle over to another capable of operating it properly.³¹

The mere fact that the occupant has knowledge of the driver's carelessness or recklessness does not of itself preclude him from recovering for injuries sustained, if he uses proper care, under the circumstances;³² but such knowledge may impose on the occupant a duty of greater watchfulness.³³ Moreover, an occupant is not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to take steps to protect himself where he has no knowledge, and is not chargeable with knowledge, of the driver's recklessness or incompetency,³⁴ or where a reasonably prudent person would not have done so in the same or similar circumstances,³⁵ or where his failure to do speed if they should go on, could not recover from driver for injuries, since he assumed risk of excessive speed.—Curley v. Mahan, 193 N.E. 34, 288 Mass. 369.

Willful or wanton conduct

Guest held not estopped to claim that driver's conduct was negligent, willful, or wanton, even though he did not insist that automobile be stopped to let him out.—O'Neal v. Caffarello, 25 N.E.2d 534, 303 Ill.App. 574.

Gross negligence

Where plaintiff knew of employee's inability safely to operate an automobile and nevertheless engaged in a joint venture with employee, permitting employee to operate automobile, plaintiff was guilty of gross negligence in riding with employee, which negligence barred recovery from employer for injuries sustained when employee lost control of automobile.—Scott v. McCrocklin, La. App., 29 So.2d 619.

so did not contribute proximately to cause his injuries.³⁶ Where the injuries result from the negligence of another motorist, the occupant may recover notwithstanding his driver was too young to obtain a license.³⁷

Intoxication. An occupant may be guilty of contributory negligence, precluding a recovery, in riding or continuing to ride with a driver who he knows, or in the exercise of reasonable care should know, is unable to operate the motor vehicle with proper precaution or skill, because of his incompetency, carelessness, or recklessness due to intoxication, and the injuries sustained are proximately caused or contributed to by the driver's intoxicated condition,³⁸ unless there is willful negligence on the part of the driver.³⁹ This rule is particularly applicable where the occupant has participated in drinking,⁴⁰ or was instrumental in furnishing,⁴¹ the liquor with which the driver became intoxicated. A guest's contributory negligence, however, in case of the driver's intoxication, must be determined by the facts, and by what an ordinarily prudent person would do under the same or similar circumstances.⁴² A guest is not contributorily negligent if he does not know, and is not charged with knowledge, that the driver is intoxicated,⁴³ or if the driver, although intoxicated, is free from negligence contributing to the injury;⁴⁴ nor does the occupant's negligence in participating in the drinking constitute a proximate cause, if the driver is not so intoxicated as to affect his driving.⁴⁵

An occupant riding with a driver, with knowledge of the latter's driving habits or inexperience, ordinarily assumes the risk of injury incident thereto.

An occupant riding with a driver, with knowledge of the latter's driving habits or inexperience, and acquiescing therein, assumes the risk of, and cannot recover for, an injury incident to the driver's incompetency or inexperience⁴⁶ or recklessness.⁴⁷ An occupant also assumes the risk of injury incident to riding with a driver who he knows, or should know, is intoxicated to such an extent that he is unable properly to operate the motor vehicle,⁴⁸ unless the driver's intoxication constitutes gross negligence,⁴⁹ except that, even though the driver is guilty of gross negligence while intoxicated, the occupant assumes the risk of injury therefrom if he too has become so intoxicated from drinking with the driver that he is unable to appreciate the hazard incident to the driver's intoxication.⁵⁰ An occupant, however, does not assume the risk of the driver's inexperience or recklessness, of which he has no knowledge or appreciation, and which he has no reason to anticipate, in time to avert the accident.⁵¹

Passenger by voluntarily riding in truck beside driver so obviously intoxicated that passenger, unless himself intoxicated, must have been aware of his condition, thereby assumed the risk and was not merely contributorily negligent, and neither driver nor owner of truck could be held liable in damages for passenger's death as a result of driver's intoxicated condition, regardless of whether or not truck owner was negligent in employing driver.—Saxton v. Rose, 29 So.2d 646, 201 Miss. 814.

Where driver was intoxicated and guest, in order to avoid disagreeable possibilities, took a chance on driver's ability to drive, when there was no emergency confronting guest, and abundant means of conveyance over highway, guest accepted the consequence of his venture which would preclude his recovery.—Hicks v. Herbert, 113 S.W.2d 1197, 173 Tenn. 1.

tendant if the latter failed to exercise ordinary care to avoid the injury after becoming aware of the peril, where the exercise of such care would have avoided the injury.

In the application of the last clear chance doctrine, also referred to as the "humanitarian doctrine," "the doctrine of discovered peril," and "the doctrine of antecedent or subsequent negligence," discussed generally in the C.J.S. title Negligence, §§ 136-139, also 45 C.J. p 984 note 82-995 note 41, it is generally held that, notwithstanding a person injured by a motor vehicle may have been guilty of negligence in placing himself in a position of peril, he may, nevertheless, recover for his injuries, if the driver of the vehicle failed to exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring him after he became aware, or in many jurisdictions, should have become aware, of his peril, where the exercise of such care would have avoided the injury.⁵² It has been said that the courts are wide of agreement as to the extent of the last clear chance doctrine as applied to the operation of automobiles,⁵³ and in some jurisdictions the doctrine does not prevail.⁵⁴

All the necessary elements of the doctrine must be present in order to bring it into play in motor vehicle cases.⁵⁵ Recovery has been permitted under the last clear chance doctrine in cases in which pedestrians were killed or injured by a motor ve-

Negligence of motorist who had last clear chance to avoid injury was proximate cause of injury.—Smith v. Gamp, 35 P.2d 40, 178 Wash. 451.

Doctrine presupposes that both parties were negligent, that there was an opportunity, a clear chance, established by substantial evidence, that defendant saw or knew of plaintiff's perilous position, and could have avoided collision, but did not do so —Berton v. Cochran, 185 P.2d 349, 81 Cal.App.2d 776—Dalley v. Williams, 166 P.2d 595, 73 Cal.App.2d 427.

Essence of humanitarian doctrine is that a defendant in charge of dangerous instrumentality, such as automobile, will be held liable to plaintiff for injuries caused thereby, notwithstanding plaintiff's contributory negligence, if plaintiff was in position of imminent peril and defendant, by exercising reasonable care, could have discovered such peril and averted accident by use of means and instrumentalities at hand without danger to defendant or others after peril became discoverable, but failed to use such means and instrumentalities to avoid accident.—State ex rel. Reason for rule

Automobile drivers in crowded traffic cannot recklessly disregard the essentials of careful driving and throw on others, under the doctrine of last clear chance, the whole burden of protecting all persons potentially involved, and under penalty of liability for the ensuing damages.—Hochelsen v. injury,⁶² as where the defendant driver could have observed the danger and avoided the accident by keeping a proper lookout,⁶³ or where defendant turned into an intersection with an arterial highway without first stopping as required by statute.⁶⁴ Recovery cannot be denied one injured by a motor vehicle on the ground that he had the last clear chance to avoid injury where plaintiff, unexpectedly imperiled, could not have avoided the accident by exercising care,⁶⁵ or where defendant actually had the last clear chance to avoid the accident but negligently failed to act thereon.⁶⁶

§ 493(2). Cause of Injury

a. In general

b. Concurrent or continuing negligence of plaintiff

a. In General

The doctrine of last clear chance has no application where the negligence of the injured person was the sole proximate cause of the accident or where the injured person was not placed in a position of danger by his own negligence.

In order to invoke the doctrine of last clear chance, the negligence of defendant in failing to avoid injuring plaintiff must have been a proximate cause of the injury,⁶⁷ and the doctrine has no application where the injured person's negligence was the sole proximate cause of the accident, as where defendant exercised due care⁶⁸ or where defendant's negligence was not a proximate cause of the accident.⁶⁹

Position of peril not due to negligence. The last clear chance doctrine has been held to have no application where the injured person has not been placed in the position of danger by his own negligence.⁷⁰

b. Concurrent or Continuing Negligence of Plaintiff

As a general rule the last clear chance doctrine is inapplicable if the negligence of the injured person continued to the time of the accident and concurred with the negligence of the motorist as a proximate cause of the injury. This rule is limited in some jurisdictions, so as to permit recovery under the doctrine, if the driver actually discovered or should have discovered the danger in time to avoid the accident by the exercise of due care.

It has been held as a general rule that recovery for death or injuries suffered in a motor vehicle accident cannot be based on the last clear chance doctrine where the negligence of the deceased or injured person actively continued up to the time of the accident, and concurred with the negligence of the driver in proximately causing the injury.⁷¹ In order for the doctrine to be applicable, the negligence of the deceased or injured person must have ceased as the proximate cause of the accident,⁷² and defendant motorist must have been guilty of some new breach of duty subsequent to plaintiff's negligence.⁷³ The position of peril must be one from which the injured person could not escape by the exercise of ordinary care.⁷⁴ This rule, however, does not require that the inability of the injured person to escape the danger shall be due to a situation which makes it physically impossible for him to do so; it applies equally when he is oblivious of the danger and for that reason unable to cope with it,⁷⁵ but this inability to cope with the situation must be apparent.⁷⁶ Under some of the authorities the rule of continuing or concurrent negligence does not necessarily bar recovery if the driver of the vehicle actually discovered, or should have discovered the peril in time to avoid the accident,⁷⁷ and actually had the last clear chance to avoid it,⁷⁸ at least

Nature of plaintiff's negligence

In order to bar recovery on ground that injured person negligently or voluntarily caused himself to be placed in dangerous position in the highway, which proximately contributed to the accident, the dangerous condition which he allegedly created negligently, must have continued to be so to the time of the accident, and thereby concurred with act of the defendant inducing the result. This is so regardless of whether defendant's negligence was primary or subsequent negligence.—Heffelfinger v. Lane, 196 So. 720, 239 Ala. 659.

Guest and driver falling asleep

Where deceased, in spite of knowledge that driver of automobile was very drowsy and had consumed some liquor, and in spite of warning to keep driver awake, fell asleep himself and was killed when driver dozed and automobile left highway, doctrine of last clear chance had no application.—Rennolds' Adm'x v. Subsequent care by injured person

Failure to observe danger

In action for injuries to motorist who, while recklessly proceeding at excessive speed on highway on foggy night, struck rear of truck making left turn at intersection when by exercise of reasonable care motorist could have observed the truck and have avoided the collision, doctrine of last clear chance was not available to motorist.—Folger v. Richfield Oil Corp., 182 P.2d 337, 80 Cal.App.2d 655.

Pedestrian caught in traffic

In action by pedestrian for injuries sustained when struck by truck at intersection in pedestrian lane, when traffic light, which had been in favor of pedestrian, changed after pedestrian had entered intersection, last clear chance doctrine was held to apply, where pedestrian was prevented from crossing street by automobiles coming through intersection from same direction as that from which truck approached.—Wendelin v. Violation of traffic signal

A motorist proceeding on favorable traffic light after having looked in both directions before entering intersection and failing to see approaching bicyclist could not be charged with having constructively seen bicyclist entering intersection in violation of traffic light within sufficient time to have avoided accident, and hence was not liable for death of bicyclist under last clear chance doctrine.—Clark v. De Beer, La.App., 188 So. 517.

A pedestrian, notwithstanding his continuing negligence in walking on wrong side of roadway, may recover

where the injured person was unaware of his peril.⁷⁹ In these cases the negligence of the driver is considered the proximate and immediate cause of the injury and that of the person injured the remote cause.⁸⁰

In at least one jurisdiction it has been held that, if the driver of a motor vehicle fails to exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring one after actually becoming aware of his peril, the person injured may recover, notwithstanding his negligence, continued up to the moment of injury;⁸¹ it is otherwise, however, if plaintiff's peril was not actually seen, although it should have been seen,⁸² unless plaintiff's negligence had culminated in a situation from which he could not extricate himself by the exercise of due care.⁸³

In the case of two vehicles the obligations of the two drivers have been said to be relative,⁸⁴ each being charged with using due care to avoid a collision.⁸⁵

§ 493(3). Danger or Peril

a. In general

b. Knowledge or ignorance of peril

a. In General

As a general rule, in order to invoke the doctrine of last clear chance, the person injured must have been in a position of peril or danger.

The peril or danger of the injured person has been held to constitute the chief factor and foundation on which the last clear chance or humanitarian doctrine rests.⁸⁶ This peril must be something more than a bare possibility of an injury occurring from the operation of the vehicle; it must be certain peril.⁸⁷ Accordingly, the doctrine does not apply in the operation of a motor vehicle and the duty from motorist if motorist had last clear chance to avert injury and failed to avert himself of it.—Herbert v. Stephenson, 35 S.E.2d 753, 184 Va. 457.

Pedestrian standing in road

Where automobile struck deceased who was standing near middle of street with back toward approaching automobile, driver of automobile had last clear chance to avoid accident.—Bennett v. Spencer, 189 S.E. 169, 167 Va. 268.

Grossly negligent pedestrian

Static negligence

Where motorist was cognizant of inattention of his approach by boy playing football in street in violation of ordinance and failed to give boy timely warning to put him on attention, boy's negligence, although continuing, was static, while motorist, by his control of agency of approaching danger, had the last clear chance to avoid effect of boy's negligence and could be held liable under the last clear chance doctrine.—Graham v. Johnson, 172 P.2d 665, 109 Utah 365.

Jaywalker

Where pedestrian crossing street midway between street intersections was struck by motorist's backing toward parking space, last clear chance doctrine was held inapplicable, motorist not having seen pedestrian.—Cook v. Carleton, 4 P.2d 1098, 165 Wash. 232.

Standing on highway

Where driver of automobile did not see motorists standing on highway until moment of collision, and at that time the negligence of motorists in so standing had not ceased, recovery for death of one and for injury sustained by the other could not be based on the doctrine of last clear chance.—Chadwick v. Ek, 95 P.2d 398, 1 Wash. 2d 117.

Injury to cows on highway

Driver of automobile who kept on driving, although highway was obscured by lights from passing car, was not chargeable with negligence under last clear chance doctrine, on striking cows permitted to roam in highway at dusk unaccompanied by person.—Frowd v. Marchbank, 283 P. 467, 154 Wash. 834.

Negligence held not continuing

Truck driver, permitting exhaustion of gasoline, improperly securing tow chain, and failing to post lookout when chain became unhooked, was held not guilty of negligence, continuing until automobile struck rear of standing truck, so as to render last clear chance doctrine inapplicable.—Chapin v. Stickel, 22 P.2d 290, 173 Wash. 174.

Nature of plaintiff's peril in order to invoke last clear chance doctrine generally see the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 136-139, also 45 C.J. p 992 notes 23-26.

"The humanitarian doctrine does not operate until the injured is in imminent peril."—Kimbrough v. Chervitz, 186 S.W.2d 461, 465, 353 Mo. 1154.

Merely approach to position of imminent peril is insufficient to bring

of the driver thereunder to take measures to avoid injuring plaintiff does not begin unless and until the latter actually comes into or is actually in or entering a position of peril or danger.⁸⁸ The limits of the danger zone are determined by the facts of the particular case.⁸⁹ Some authorities have held that the required point of danger or peril is reached only when plaintiff has reached a point from which he cannot escape by the exercise of ordinary care.⁹⁰

Plaintiff's knowledge of the approach of defendant's automobile restricts the limits of the danger zone,⁹¹ while his obliviousness to his danger may extend the danger zone.⁹² It has been held that, where plaintiff knows of the approach of defendant's vehicle, the driver's duty to act is postponed until plaintiff is actually in the path of the vehicle or so close to it that it should be reasonably apparent to the driver under the facts of the situation that plaintiff will continue on his way and not stop before he comes into defendant's path.⁹³ Where the pedestrian pauses before entering the traffic lane, the driver's duty to act does not arise until after the pedestrian enters the lane, and, oblivious of his peril, continues to walk toward the point where he must be struck unless the driver does something to avoid doing so.⁹⁴

b. Knowledge or Ignorance of Peril

- (a) By injured person
- (b) By defendant

(a) By Injured Person

The last clear chance doctrine may be applicable notwithstanding the injured person was aware of his peril, if it was apparent that he could not extricate himself therefrom.

The last clear chance doctrine may be applicable notwithstanding the injured person was aware of his peril, if it was apparent that he could not extricate himself therefrom.⁹⁵ The humanitarian rule

Anticipating unusual conduct

Where plaintiff was not in the path of defendant's truck, as it backed toward gravel bin, until truck was within a few inches of plaintiff when, in response to a shout from third person, plaintiff jumped backward into the path of the truck and sustained injuries complained of, the possibility that plaintiff might do the unusual and jump backward was not such certainty of peril as was required to create a position of peril under the humanitarian doctrine.—Partney v. Agers, 187 S.W.2d 743, 238 Mo.App. 764.

Automobile host could not be held liable under the humanitarian rule for injuries sustained by guest in collision without a finding that guest was in a position of peril.—Stitsell v. Arthur Morgan Trucking Co., Mo. App., 118 S.W.2d 49.

Injury by other vehicle

A bus company was not liable, under the discovered peril doctrine, for injuries to pedestrian, struck by company's bus, which he negligently failed to see, on ground of negligence of driver of another of company's busses, approaching from opposite direction, in failing to stop such bus or drive it onto shoulder of street as soon as he realized pedestrian's perilous position near center of street.—Elder v. Panhandle Stages Shuttle Service, 193 S.W.2d 170, 144 Tex. 638.

Person alighting from moving vehicle

It has been held that a duty under the discovered peril doctrine does not arise as to one, not immature or lacking in discretion, who alights from the vehicle on command of the driver while it is moving at a pace not creating an obvious or imminent danger.—Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. Winkler, Tex.Civ.App., 40 S.W.2d 831.

At intersection

In action under humanitarian rule for injuries sustained in collision between trucks at intersection, defendant's contention that plaintiff was not in position of imminent peril until plaintiff's truck was athwart middle line of intersection directly in path of defendant's truck, which was then only twenty-five feet away, was held erroneous, where danger zone was wider than path of defendant's truck.—Villinger v. Nighthawk Freight Service, Mo.App., 104 S.W.2d 740.

Vehicles approaching intersection

Where motorist who saw truck approaching from the right, when motorist stopped before entering intersection, motorist was not in position of imminent peril under humanitarian doctrine until he had started his automobile and proceeded so far that he could no longer stop short of path of oncoming truck.—Gosney v. May Lumber & Coal Co., 179 S.W.2d 51, 352 Mo. 693.

(b) By Defendant

It is essential to the application of the doctrine of the last clear chance that the defendant had knowledge or that, by the exercise of ordinary care, he could have acquired knowledge that the person injured was in a position of peril prior to the accident.

Duty on private property

Where defendant's trucks were engaged in hauling gravel from bins on private property where the only persons likely to be encountered were workmen familiar with the continuous movement of the trucks which had to be backed into a narrow space under the bins, the truck drivers were not under a duty to maintain constant lookout, and where truck driver failed to see workman who suddenly jumped into path of the truck, recovery for injuries sustained could not be had under humanitarian doctrine.—Partney v. Agers, 187 S.W.2d 743, 238 Mo.App. 764.

driver was under a specific obligation to look out for other persons or vehicles.⁹⁹ In order to bring a situation within the operation of this rule, it is necessary that the driver became, or in the exercise of ordinary care ought to have become, aware not only of the position of peril of the person injured, but also that he either reasonably could not escape from it, or apparently would not avail himself of opportunities open to him for so doing.¹ The driver's duty to act has been held to arise when the injured person approached so near the ultimate point of collision that it was, or reasonably should have been, apparent that he either could not, or would not, stop or otherwise save himself before coming into the driver's path.²

In some jurisdictions, however, the doctrine is applicable only where defendant had actual knowledge that the person injured was in a position of peril from which he could not extricate himself;³ and in such jurisdictions defendant may not be held liable on the theory that he would have discovered the peril but for remissness on his part.⁴ Under

Guest occupant of vehicle

Whether driver of truck involved in intersectional collision with automobile saw or could have seen occupants of automobile was immaterial as respects liability under humanitarian negligence doctrine for injuries sustained by guest occupant of automobile.—Teague v. Plaza Exp. Co., 205 S.W.2d 563, 356 Mo. 1186.

Right of way as factor

(1) In action for injuries received when defendants' truck struck automobile in which plaintiff was a guest, question of which vehicle had right of way was circumstance to be considered on issue of time when defendants' driver was properly to be charged with knowledge of plaintiff's peril, until which time he was not obligated to have taken appropriate steps to avoid collision.—Dean v. Mocerl, Mo.App., 87 S.W.2d 218.

(2) A motorist proceeding on favorable traffic light after having looked in both directions before entering intersection and failing to see approaching bicyclist could not be charged with having constructively seen bicyclist entering intersection in violation of traffic light within sufficient time to have avoided accident, and hence was not liable for death of bicyclist under last clear chance doctrine.—Clark v. De Beer, La.App., 188 So. 517.

Duty to keep lookout

Persons using private driveway

In action for death of trashman struck by automobile being backed out of driveway, use of the driveway once each month by the trashman and sporadic use by delivery men did not constitute such public use as to invoke extended humanitarian rule as to discoverable peril.—State ex rel. Knowledge of obliviousness to peril

(1) In collision case, where plaintiff drove automobile into intersection without noticing stop sign, there must have been something in plaintiff's actions or manner to indicate to driver of defendant's truck that plaintiff was oblivious to the stop sign, in order to bring case within humanitarian rule.—Hanks v. Anderson-Parks, Inc., Mo.App., 143 S.W.2d 314.

(2) In order to be held to have seen what he should have seen, it must appear that there was something about the actions and conduct of the person injured to indicate to the motorist that the person injured was unaware of the danger and would for that reason be unlikely to change his position.—Thompson v. Realization of peril

Under last clear chance doctrine, for knowledge of plaintiff's peril to be imputed to motorist it must appear that circumstances were such that reasonable man would realize peril caused by unawareness.—Brown v. McCuan, 132 P.2d 838, 56 Cal.App.2d 35.

In some jurisdictions a driver of a motor vehicle is required to exercise the highest degree of care to discover a pedestrian in peril or danger. In these jurisdictions the duty to use the means at hand to avoid injuring the pedestrian arises when the motorist sees or in the exercise of such care should see the danger into which the pedestrian is entering,⁶ and his apparent obliviousness to the peril,⁷ and this is true regardless of whether or not the peril was created by the negligence of the pedestrian.⁸

Where a pedestrian is in a position of safety just before the accident, the driver's duty to take care to avoid injuring the pedestrian does not arise until he is in a position to discover by the exercise of the requisite care that the pedestrian intended to step out from his position of safety.⁹ When a motorist driving on a highway sees a pedestrian walking toward the highway, the driver may assume, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, that the pedestrian will not negligently continue on into the path of the vehicle.¹⁰

§ 493(4). Ability and Opportunity to Avoid Injury

In order that the doctrine of last clear chance may apply, it must appear that the driver had an opportunity to avoid the accident, with safety to himself and others.

In order that the doctrine of last clear chance may apply, it must appear that the driver had an opportunity to avoid the accident,¹¹ with safety to himself and others.¹² A mere showing that there was a possibility that defendant could have avoided the injury is insufficient to justify recovery under the doctrine.¹³ Accordingly, in order that the doc-

Splitting of seconds

The doctrine of last clear chance does not require a splitting of seconds when emergencies arise, since the doctrine presupposes time for effective action and is not applicable where the emergency is so sudden that there is no time to avoid the accident.

If pedestrian stepped from safe place in front of or into side of moving vehicle and there was not time after discovery for driver to avoid collision, pedestrian could not recover, the doctrine being inapplicable.

er has actual knowledge of the danger, where the driver did not actually discover the injured person's position of peril in time to do so.¹⁶ Where the injured person does not come into his position of peril until substantially the instant of the accident, the doctrine is inapplicable.¹⁷

The doctrine under consideration is usually inapplicable where the injured person comes to an intersection last and runs into the side of defendant's vehicle, since, in such case, in the absence of exceptional circumstances, the facts show that the injured person was not in a position of imminent peril soon enough for defendant to act effectively,¹⁸ although the doctrine has been held to apply where plaintiff was on a through highway and defendant had slowed down his vehicle leading plaintiff to believe that defendant was going to obey a stop sign.¹⁹

§ 493(5). Care Required after Peril Is, or Should Be, Discovered

Under the last clear chance doctrine a motorist, after he becomes aware of the peril of another, must exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring such person.

Liability of the motorist under the last clear chance or humanitarian doctrine is generally determined from what he does or fails to do at the time and after the peril raises,²⁰ and after he discovers, or should discover, such peril.²¹ The doctrine is inapplicable if there is no showing of negligence on the part of defendant after becoming aware of the danger;²² negligence of the motor-

Failure to stop vehicle

Doctrine is not applicable where there is no evidence that driver saw peril in which plaintiff had placed himself at a time when he could have stopped his vehicle.—Thomasson v. Burlington Transp. Co., C.C.A. Colo., 128 F.2d 355.

Pedestrian thrown in path of vehicle

Last clear chance doctrine was inapplicable, notwithstanding driver of defendant's truck saw pedestrian step into path of another truck when forty or fifty feet distant, since defendant's driver was not bound to anticipate that any accident would result in pedestrian being thrown into his path by other truck and evidence showed that defendant's driver did everything possible to avoid accident.—Maranta v. Wenzelberg, 272 N.Y.S. 710, 241 App.Div. 420, affirmed 196 N.E. 554, 267 N.Y. 510.

Sleeping driver

Doctrine is inapplicable where dangerous predicament which injured driver was in was due solely to fact that he had fallen asleep and was unaware of situation, and defendant motorist had no knowledge that such was the fact, and had no opportunity to avoid collision.—Johnson v. Southwestern Engineering Co., 107 P.2d 417, 41 Cal. App.2d 623.

In action for injuries sustained by boy when his unlighted bicycle was struck at night by approaching automobile driven on wrong side of street by motorist who did not see the bicycle, doctrine was not applicable where boy's position of peril from which he could not, with reasonable care, have extricated himself, existed only during the instant he passed a parked automobile.—*Everest v. Collision

ist in the operation of the vehicle which antecedes the peril which arose is of no concern on the issue of the application of the doctrine.²³

In the absence of a statute imposing on the driver a duty to exercise a higher degree of care,²⁴ the rule does not apply if he is unable by the exercise of ordinary care to avoid the injury after he becomes aware, or in the exercise of ordinary care could have become aware, of the injured person's peril.²⁵

In general, the doctrine requires the motorist to follow his discovery of the peril by doing all an ordinarily prudent man would do to avoid the accident in the exercise of the requisite care.²⁶ While truck about time truck came to a stop on extreme right of its side of road with its right wheels off the pavement, the presence of truck was but a condition and not the cause of deaths of automobile occupants so that last clear chance doctrine was inapplicable.—Hewitt's Adm'r v. Primary negligence

The humanitarian negligence doctrine is inapplicable where the only negligence involved is the primary negligence of the motorist.—State ex rel. Brosnahan v. Shain, 126 S.W.2d 1193, 344 Mo. 404.

Passenger in vehicle

Doctrine of subsequent negligence in failing to apply brakes immediately after striking loose rock was inapplicable in passenger's action against driver for injuries; such negligence was part of the original negligence.—McDermott v. Sibert, 119 So. 681, 218 Ala. 670.

24. Highest degree of care

In Missouri, under the statutes and the humanitarian doctrine, a motorist is required to exercise the highest degree of care consistent with safety to himself and others.—Blank v. Reliance on care by plaintiff

(1) Operator of vehicle who sees pedestrian in apparent possession of faculties, with back turned to approaching vehicle or head bowed or turned away, in absence of other evidence of unconsciousness of peril, is not under duty of prevision under last clear chance doctrine; the operator may assume that a normal person in a situation requiring the exercise of prudence will use his faculties in time to prevent injury.—Willard Stores v. Cornnell, 23 S.E.2d 761, 181 Va. 143—Green v. Ruffin, 125 S.E. 742, 141 Va. 628, rehearing denied 127 S.E. 486, 141 Va. 628.

(2) Driver of truck may presume that motorist at intersection will not continue his approach until he arrives at the truck, where it is obvious that motorist can with the least care avoid the impact.—Folger v. Richfield Oil Corp., 182 P.2d 337, 80 Cal.App.2d 655.

(3) In the case of two vehicles approaching each other from opposite directions on a straight, unobstructed highway, one traveling in his proper lane and the other not, the motorist in the proper lane may assume that the other will extricate himself from the danger by swerving into the proper lane.—Erickson v. Barnes, 107 P.2d 348, 6 Wash.2d 251.

Remaining in low gear

Motorist, proceeding recklessly at excessive speed on foggy night, who collided with rear of truck making left turn at street intersection, could not invoke last clear chance doctrine on theory that truck driver could have cleared the intersection more quickly had he not continued in compound low gear, where truck driver knew that by proceeding in any higher gear up incline he would incur more likelihood of killing his motor.—Folger v. Richfield Oil Corp., 182 P.2d 337, 80 Cal.App.2d 655.

it cannot be said as a matter of law that a failure to use all means within the power of the motorist to check the vehicle is a failure to use ordinary care;²⁷ it has been held that the motorist must use all the means available or at his command to avoid the accident,²⁸ consistent with safety to himself and others,²⁹ either by stopping the vehicle, lowering its speed, changing its course, or sounding an alarm.³⁰

The motorist must act in time for his action to be effective³¹ if he has the time and means to avoid the injury.³² He may not wait until the person in peril takes the last step into the path of the automobile, after which step it would be impossible for the driver to avert the injury.³³

On failure to give right of way

(1) Even if pedestrian in attempting to cross street between intersections outside of a crosswalk failed to yield right of way to approaching automobile, motorist was not relieved from duty of exercising due care for safety of pedestrian.—Bays v. Clugston, 161 P.2d 953, 71 Cal. App.2d 55.

(2) Driver approaching intersection from right must use ordinary care not to injure driver of converging vehicle after becoming aware of latter's perilous situation from failure to yield right of way.—Morris v. Bloomgren, 187 N.E. 2, 127 Ohio App. 147, 89 A.L.R. 831.

(3) Plaintiffs could not recover for damages sustained in intersectional collision under doctrine of last clear chance, where driver of defendants' automobile did everything possible to avoid collision after discovering plaintiffs' peril, and plaintiffs' negligence in failing to yield right of way had not ceased at time of the collision.—Mancinelli v. Brown, 155 P.2d 497, 22 Wash.2d 299.

Faulty judgment

Fact that intersectional collision would not have occurred had driver of defendants' automobile swerved to right instead of to the left did not justify holding defendants liable for the accident; failure to use better judgment in such case is no basis for recovery.—Mancinelli v. Brown, supra.

Negligence after collision

Illegal act of girl in coasting on street where coasting was prohibited would not preclude recovery for her death from bus driver if evidence would warrant finding that death was caused by driver's negligence in backing bus after girl's sled had collided with bus and driver had alighted and seen girl under front part of bus.—Rocha v. Alber, 18 N.E.2d 1018, 302 Mass. 155.

Observance of rule of road

Under humanitarian doctrine motorist was required to avoid a collision if possible, and was not entitled to insist upon rule of the road and blindly pursue his way as long as he remained to right of center of highway.—State ex rel. Grisham v. Allen, 124 S.W.2d 1080, 344 Mo. 66, mandate conformed to, App., 130 S.W.2d 653.

Wanton conduct

J. ACTIONS

1. IN GENERAL

§ 494. Nature and Form

The nature and form of actions to recover for damages occasioned by a motor vehicle are controlled by the principles applicable to civil actions generally.

The nature and form of actions to recover for damages occasioned by a motor vehicle are controlled by the principles applicable to civil actions generally.³⁴ Under the general rules as to the distinction between the actions of trespass and of trespass on the case, in order to support an action of trespass the injury must be direct and immediate.³⁵ While it has been held that, in order to support an action of trespass, the wrong complained of must consist of something more than a mere breach of duty amounting to simple negligence,³⁶ it has also been held that where the injury is direct and immediate, even though the result of negligence, plaintiff has an election to sue either in trespass or in trespass on the case.³⁷ Where the injury is the effect of force; direct and intentional, it has been held that the action must be in trespass, and not on the case.³⁸ Where the plaintiff's injuries are caused by the servants or agents of the defendant, as a general rule, the action is trespass on the case.³⁹

Common-law or statutory action. In a proper case a common-law action may be maintained to recover damages caused by a motor vehicle.⁴⁰ Where an action is based on negligence found in a violation of a statute regulating the operation of motor vehicles which does not provide for a civil action for damages against those violating it, the only penalty being criminal, it is to be construed as a common-law rather than a statutory action,⁴¹ and plaintiff must base his action on the common law and not on the statute,⁴² although he may make proof of negligence by showing a violation of the statute.⁴³

Action in rem. Where by virtue of statutory authority the offending vehicle is made a party and attached, the action, in so far as it is against the vehicle, is an action in rem.⁴⁴

§ 495. Conditions Precedent

The plaintiff must comply with statutory conditions regulating the maintenance of his action for damages caused by a motor vehicle, such as statutes requiring notice of claim or of injury to be filed.

Plaintiff must comply with statutory conditions regulating the maintenance of his action for damages caused by a motor vehicle.⁴⁵ In the absence

Injury by hired car

Where plaintiff was sprayed with burning gasoline from explosion when driver of automobile hired by plaintiff attempted to start car which had stalled, basis for plaintiff's action against owner of car was negligence, not breach of warranty.—Dunmire v. Fitzgerald, 37 A.2d 596, 349 Pa. 511.

Tort or contract

As to one who accepts an invitation to ride on the running board of a car to a certain point failure to stop at the specified point would be at most a breach of promise which would not be a cause of action under tort law as it relates to the operation of motor vehicles.—*Fritz v. of a statute providing otherwise, notice of injury or of claim is not a prerequisite to the maintenance of such actions.⁴⁶ A statute requiring a notice of claim to be filed where the action is based on the dangerous or defective condition of public property has been held not to apply to an action based on the negligent operation of a public motor vehicle.⁴⁷ Under statutes so providing, however, notice of injury or of claim must be filed,⁴⁸ and such requirement frequently exists where the action is against a municipal corporation⁴⁹ or officer thereof,⁵⁰ a county,⁵¹ the state,⁵² or state highway department.⁵³

The requirement of notice has been held to be an indispensable prerequisite to the bringing of an action by any person,⁵⁴ regardless of his age or his physical or mental condition.⁵⁵ It has been held, however, that failure to file a claim against the officer, servant, or agent who is directly responsible for the injury, although essential to the maintenance of an action against such person, is not fatal to the maintenance of an action against his employer,⁵⁶ and does not impair his employer's right of subrogation against him.⁵⁷

Accident not on city streets

A statute requiring notice to be filed against the municipality for injuries caused by municipally-owned vehicles while operating on public streets and highways of the municipality has been held not to apply to injuries not sustained in an accident on the public streets and highways of the municipality.—*Babcock v. Requirement not dispensed with

A statute providing for liability of county for negligent acts of drivers of automobiles of county and authorizing action to be brought against county in "manner directed by law" has been held not to dispense with necessity of complying with statute requiring presentation of claims, since the manner directed by law is found in the statute requiring presentation of claim; and the fact that statute authorized county to insure against liability of county for negligent acts of drivers of county automobiles, and fact that county acts under such authorization are immaterial on question whether person allegedly injured was required to file claim.—Artukovich v. Astendorf, 131 P.2d 831, 21 Cal.2d 329.

Exclusion of workmen's compensation claims

Under a statute so providing, claims arising under the workmen's compensation law are excluded from the requirement of notice, but a claim by the employee of a private person against the county does not fall within the statutory exclusion.—Broome County v. Binghamton Taxicab Co., 75 N.Y.S.2d 423, 190 Misc. 172.

54. Cal.—Artukovich v. Astendorf, 131 P.2d 831, 21 Cal.2d 329.

Counterclaim

The fact that claim is asserted by way of counterclaim and not by independent action is immaterial with respect to necessity of notice.—Broome County v. Binghamton Taxicab Co., 75 N.Y.S.2d 423, 190 Misc. 172.

The required notice must be filed at the proper time⁵⁸ and with the proper person, corporation, or authority.⁵⁹ Substantial compliance with the statutory requirements as to the form and contents of the notice has been held to be sufficient,⁶⁰ and the notice need not conform to the strict rules of pleading, but need state only such facts as will enable the person sought to be charged with liability to investigate promptly the merits of the claim.⁶¹ It has been held, however, that a notice of claim omitting to state the date of the accident is fatally defective.⁶² Under a statute so providing, the court may correct, supply, or disregard irregularities and omissions in the notice of claim,⁶³ not involving the manner or time of service.⁶⁴ Where a public agency is required to give notice of its objections if a claim is insufficiently itemized, and fails to do so, but rejects the claim on the merits, it has been held to be barred from later objecting to the sufficiency of the claim.⁶⁵

before proceeding against the owner.⁶⁶

Payment for repairs which have been made is not essential to the maintenance of an action for the damage sustained in the absence of a statute providing otherwise.⁶⁷

§ 496. What Law Governs

The law of the forum controls as to all matters pertaining to remedial or procedural rights and the public policy of the forum may operate as a limitation on the enforcement of actions arising under the laws of another state.

Where action is brought in one state for damages because of a motor vehicle injury which occurred in another state, while the substantive rights of the parties ordinarily are determined according to the law of the state where the injury occurred, as discussed supra § 259, in accordance with the general rule stated in Conflict of Laws § 22, the lex fori, or law of the jurisdiction in which relief is sought, controls as to all matters pertaining to remedial or procedural, as distinguished from substantive, rights.⁶⁸ This is true as to matters of

(1) Under a provision requiring claims to be presented to the board, officer, or employee authorized to incur the expenditure or liability represented thereby, it has been held that in the case of a claim arising out of an injury caused by a municipal employee in the operation of a municipal motor vehicle it is not necessary to present the claim to the board having jurisdiction over the agency which committed the tortious act, but that the claim should be presented to the board or officer authorized to pay the claim.—*Rogers v. Facts constituting prima facie evidence Statutes providing that violation of certain speed laws, and law relating to manner of operating automobile when motorist's view is obstructed, should constitute prima facie evidence of improper operation of automobile, have been held to pertain to rules of evidence and hence not applicable in a foreign state where action is brought.—Collins v. McClure, supra.

§ 497. Defenses in General

Various matters have been held to constitute or not to constitute valid defenses to actions to recover damages for injuries resulting from the operation of motor vehicles.

In addition to matters of defense involving questions of substantive law, considered supra §§ 246-493, various other matters have been held to constitute⁸² or not to constitute⁸³ defenses to actions to recover damages for injuries resulting from the operation of motor vehicles. In an action brought to recover damages caused by the operation of a motor vehicle, it has been held that a defendant having a right of action growing out of the collision may assert it by way of counterclaim.⁸⁴

Violation of law by plaintiff. The driver of a motor vehicle is not ordinarily regarded as being deprived of the right to recover for an injury negligently inflicted on him by reason of the fact that at the time of the injury he was disobeying a statute, where his violation of the statute in no way contributed to the injury.⁸⁵ So the fact that plain-

(1) In action by one who was an employee of defendant by sufferance for injuries resulting from the negligent operation of defendant's vehicle by driver, who asked for plaintiff's assistance, defendant could not escape liability on the defense of assumption of risk.—Krull v. Triangle Dairy, 17 N.E.2d 291, 59 Ohio App. 107.

Payment of damages to another

In action by passenger of automobile for injury sustained when motor vehicle in which he was riding collided with motor vehicle ahead because of impact from motor vehicle behind, fact that owner of middle vehicle paid for damages to vehicle ahead was held not available as defense to driver of vehicle behind.—Coppock v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 30 P.2d 549, 137 Cal.App. 80.

tiff was at the time of the accident operating a motor vehicle in violation of the statute providing that no person under sixteen years of age should operate a motor vehicle unless accompanied by an adult does not in itself bar his recovery.⁸⁶ Likewise, the operation of a motor vehicle with improper number plates affixed thereto will not of itself preclude recovery.⁸⁷ The fact that a motor vehicle is unlawfully used without the knowledge or consent of the owner does not preclude the operator of such vehicle from recovering for injuries sustained in a collision with another motor vehicle⁸⁸ unless it is shown that such unlawful use was the proximate cause of the collision.⁸⁹

Usage or custom. Since a usage or custom will not justify a negligent act, it constitutes no defense in an action based on negligence.⁹⁰

Insurance. The fact that the plaintiff is insured against the loss which he has suffered or that his damages have been paid by his insurer cannot be set up by the person causing the injury in mitigation of plaintiff's damages, as discussed in Damages § 99. Further, the fact that an insurer may be ultimately liable is not a defense on the ground that the court is without jurisdiction of the proceeding because it is amicable and pretended and only for the purpose of affecting the rights of strangers not parties to the suit.⁹¹

Willful or wanton acts. Where the injury is caused by willful or wanton acts of the person operating the motor vehicle, recovery may be had therefor, notwithstanding contributory negligence on the part of the person injured, as discussed supra § 258, and in such case the absence of intention on the part of defendant to injure plaintiff has been held not to constitute a defense.⁹²

§ 498. Jurisdiction and Venue

- a. Jurisdiction
- b. Venue

a. Jurisdiction

In the absence of an express provision as to jurisdiction of actions for tort arising out of the operation of a motor vehicle, jurisdiction of such actions is controlled by the general principles applicable to tort actions.

The jurisdiction of an action for tort arising out of the operation of a motor vehicle may be regulated by express statutory provisions,⁹³ and such provisions, where they exist, control and supersede any general rules or statutory provisions as to jurisdiction that might otherwise be applicable.⁹⁴ In the absence of such a statute, an action for tort arising out of the operation of a motor vehicle, not being different in its character from other actions of tort, jurisdiction over it is controlled by the general principles applicable to tort actions,⁹⁵ and the jurisdiction of any particular court is not enlarged or diminished by a statute affecting merely the venue of actions.⁹⁶ Where each party to a collision asserts that it was due to the negligence of the other and brings his suit for damages based on allegations to that effect, the rule that where two

Failure to use dealer's markers

Where a statute permits a dealer to lend his number plates to a purchaser for a limited period and is construed to permit the purchaser to operate the vehicle for such period by virtue of the dealer's certificate of registration, the failure of the purchaser to place the dealer's markers upon the vehicle will not preclude him from recovering for an injury received from the negligent act of another while he is operating the vehicle upon the highway.—*Bohmann v. Nonresidents. A nonresident motorist may be subjected to the jurisdiction of the state for wrongs done within the state in the operation of his motor vehicle,⁹⁸ and by using the highways of the state he is deemed to have voluntarily submitted to the jurisdiction of a court to whose jurisdiction he might not otherwise be subject.⁹⁹ A general statutory provision conferring jurisdiction of transitory actions between nonresident plaintiffs and nonresident defendants, regardless of whether the cause of action arose within or without the state, has been held not to be limited by other provisions specifically regulating the venue of actions for tort arising out of the operation of motor vehicles where either plaintiff or defendant or both are residents of the state.¹

Jurisdiction in rem. Where by statute a motor vehicle is subject to a lien for the damages done by it and an action in rem is a proper method of enforcing such lien, jurisdiction of such action may be acquired by seizure or attachment of the motor vehicle.²

b. Venue

Specific statutory provisions regulating the venue of actions for injuries caused by the operation of motor vehicles control and supersede general rules or statutory provisions.

In the absence of a constitutional prohibition, the venue of actions for injuries caused by the operation of motor vehicles may be regulated by specific statutory provisions,³ and such provisions control and supersede any general rules or statutory provisions as to venue that might otherwise be applicable,⁴ and, being remedial in character,⁵ should be construed and applied with liberality in order to accomplish their clear and obvious purpose.⁶ The

(2) Likewise, a statute authorizing service of process outside the county where the injury occurred does not operate to change the venue of actions for injuries caused by the negligent operation of motor vehicles.—Garrett v. Turner, 84 A. 354, 235 Pa. 383.

Corporation as "operator"

The term "operator" within the meaning of a statute regulating the venue of actions for injury to person or property caused by the negligence of the owner or operator of a motor vehicle has been held to include not only a driver or chauffeur, but also any firm or corporation operating a motor vehicle through the instrumentality of its agents or employees in view of the statutory definition of "operator" as any person who drives or operates a motor vehicle upon the public highways.—Pappas v. Jeffrey Mfg. Co., 41 N.E. 2d 864, 139 Ohio St. 637.

Corporation as owner causing injury

A statute regulating the venue of actions caused by the negligence of the owner of a motor vehicle has been held to apply to an action for an injury caused by the negligent operation of a motor vehicle by the agent or servant of a corporation owning the motor vehicle causing the damage.—Little v. Linder Bros. Sanitary Milk Co., 23 Ohio N.P.,N.S., 422.

Action against personal representative

A statute regulating the venue of actions for injury caused by the negligence of the owner or operator of a motor vehicle governs such action where the owner or operator dies before the action is commenced and the action is brought against his personal representatives, not-statutes have been held to apply to all actions brought after their effective date regardless of the time when the cause of action arose,⁷ but they will not be extended to control the venue of actions not within their purview.⁸ Under some statutes, in a proper case, an action for an injury resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle may be brought in the county where plaintiff resides,⁹ or where the cause of action arose or the injury occurred,¹⁰ or where defendant resides.¹¹ It has been held that the right conferred by a statute permitting suit in the county where plaintiff resides is taken away by an amendment permitting such actions to be brought in the county where the injury occurred.¹²

Actions against nonresidents. It is within the power of the state to regulate the venue of actions for injuries against nonresident motorists provided in doing so it does not unreasonably discriminate against nonresidents.¹³ Under some statutes the action must be brought in the county where the injury occurred,¹⁴ but under other statutes the action may be brought in any county of the state¹⁵ and need

An action for damages to automobile, sprayed with paint by defendant while operating paint-spraying outfit in painting bridge over which plaintiff was driving automobile, was not for recovery of damages arising from motor vehicle accident, within statute regulating venue in such actions.—State ex rel. Antonsen v. Superior Court for Grays Harbor County, supra.

Joint liability of owner and another

Under a statute authorizing actions for injury caused by the negligence of the owner of a motor vehicle to be brought against such owner in the county wherein the injured person resides, an action may be brought against the owner and one who is alleged to be jointly liable with him in the county wherein the injured person resides notwithstanding a contention that the statute permits the action to be so brought against the owner only.—Gorey v. Black, 125 N.E. 126, 100 Ohio St. 73.

If two persons, residing in different counties, are injured in the same accident, it has been held that the one bringing the action for damages first, in the county in which he resides, cannot thereby compel the other party to set up his cause of action by way of counterclaim, but each has the right to sue in his own county setting up his own cause of action.—Jones v. As enlarging general venue statute

A statute providing that an action for injuries caused by the negligent operation of a motor vehicle may be brought in the county where such injury occurs has been held not to limit the venue of such actions to such county, but to enlarge the general venue statute to provide for a situation which arose with the coming of the motor vehicle.—Uthoff v. Du Brie, 23 N.E.2d 854, 62 Ohio App. 285.

13. Statute held invalid

Statute permitting plaintiff in action against nonresident to elect to institute action in county of plaintiff's residence or in county in which injury occurred held unconstitutional where actions against residents were required to be brought in the county of defendant's residence or in which injury occurred.—Turner v. not be brought in the county where the injury occurred;¹⁶ and it has been held that a statute providing that an action for injuries caused by the operation of a motor vehicle may be brought in the county where the action arose or in the county of the residence of defendant does not limit plaintiff's right to designate the place of trial of an action against a nonresident motorist.¹⁷ The statutory appointment of a state official as agent of a nonresident motorist to accept service of process does not in and of itself fix the venue¹⁸ or limit the suit to the county of the accident,¹⁹ and does not operate to give such nonresident a residence for venue purposes in the county of the official residence of such state official.²⁰

Change of venue. Under a statute so providing, where the proper venue is laid in an action for injuries caused by the operation of a motor vehicle, the venue cannot be changed without the written consent of plaintiff filed with the court unless the court changes the venue pursuant to statutory authority.²¹

Actions against motor carriers. Specific statutory provisions governing the venue of actions against motor carriers control and supersede any general rules or statutory provisions as to venue.²² Under some provisions the action may be brought in any county where the action could be brought if defendant were a railroad corporation being sued on a like cause of action.²³ Others permit the action to be brought in any county in which any part of the motor transportation line or route may be.²⁴

§ 499. Time to Sue and Limitations

Statute not unconstitutional

Action arising out of general operation

The phrase, "the owner of the operated motor carrier," in statutory provision that if such owner is resident of state or domestic corporation action may be brought against such party in any county through which motor carrier operates, refers to and includes generally the motor vehicle line or service conducted by carrier and is not restricted to vehicle as carrier of persons or property, so that operation of act is not confined to buses and trucks actually being used in carrier's business, but extends to carrier's general business.—Windham v. Pace, supra.

(1) A statute providing that actions of tort for bodily injuries, the payment of judgments in which are required to be secured by compulsory motor vehicle liability insurance, must be brought within a fixed time, requires only such actions to be so brought as may be for bodily injuries.—Barbate v. La Vallee, 12 N.E.2d 815, 299 Mass. 411—Pierce v. Tiernan, 182 N.E. 292, 280 Mass. 180.

(2) An action for personal injuries falls within the purview of such statute even though plaintiff attempts to recover for medicine and medical attendance.—Ford v. Rogovin, 194 N.E. 719, 289 Mass. 519.

(3) On the other hand, an action for consequential injuries to plaintiff's wife in automobile accident has been held not to be limited by such statute.—Bartlett v. Hall, 193 N.E. 360, 288 Mass. 532.

(4) Moreover, such statute has been held to be modified by a general statute extending the time for the commencement of actions by minors.—Decosta v. Ye Craftsman Studio, 180 N.E. 151, 278 Mass. 315.

(5) Further, it has been held that under a soldiers' and sailors' civil relief act the period of military service of defendant should not be included in computing period of limitations for bringing action of tort for bodily injuries, the payment of judgment in which is required to be secured by compulsory insurance.—Blazejowski v. Stadnicki, 58 N.E.2d 164, 317 Mass. 352.

Vehicles subject to public control

§ 500. Parties

- a. Plaintiffs
- b. Defendants
- c. Addition of parties

a. Plaintiffs

- (1) In general
- (2) Real party in interest

(1) In General

Generally speaking, questions with reference to parties plaintiff in actions for damages growing out of the operation of a motor vehicle are determined according to the general rules applicable to civil actions.

Generally speaking, questions with reference to parties plaintiff in actions for damages growing out of the operation of a motor vehicle are determined according to the general rules applicable to civil actions.²⁶ Under the strict rules of common law, each person injured in a motor vehicle accident must sue separately where the damages, as well as the interest, are several.²⁷ However, the effect of the common-law rule has been overcome by statutory provisions under which, in a proper case, persons injured in the same motor vehicle accident may join, as plaintiffs, in one civil action,²⁸ although the court may order a severance.²⁹ A joint action by husband and wife may be maintained where the suit is for injuries sustained by the wife and damages sustained by the husband, growing out of defendant's negligence in operating a motor vehicle.³⁰

(2) Real Party in Interest

An action to recover damages arising out of a motor vehicle accident must generally be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest.

An action to recover damages arising out of a motor vehicle accident or collision generally must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest.³¹ An injured person's status as the real party in interest has been held not to be affected by the fact that he has received compensation or indemnity for his loss from a third person where the circumstances are such that a satisfied judgment against the wrongdoer will protect him from future annoyance or loss, and where, as against the party suing, the wrongdoer can urge any defenses he could make against the third person.³²

While the mere payment by an insurer of all damages sustained by the owner of a motor vehicle because of its injury has been held not to deprive the owner of his status as the real party in interand control of a state regulatory commission has been held not to apply to actions for injuries caused by a truck subject to such control in view of the legislative history of the statute, the fact that the statute appeared under a chapter entitled "Motor Vehicles Carrying Passengers for Hire," and the fact that a separate act provided for the regulation of vehicles carrying property for hire.—Steele v. Smalley, 44 A. 2d 213, 141 Me. 355.

Payment without intent to become subrogated

Questions with reference to the parties defendant in actions for damages arising out of the operation of a motor vehicle are usually determined according to the general rules applicable to civil actions.⁵¹ While independent tort-feasors each of whom causes some damage cannot be sued jointly,⁵² where the negligence of two or more persons concurs in causing an injury by a motor vehicle it is generally held that any or all may be joined as defendants in an action brought by the person injured,⁵³ or each may be sued separately.⁵⁴ Thus, where a collision between vehicles is due to the negligence of two drivers, a third person injured by reason thereof may join both drivers as defendants, and any other persons responsible for their negligence,⁵⁵ or he may sue each separately.⁵⁶

(2) Thus, it has been held that it is proper in a negligence action to join as defendants persons who, while traveling in opposite directions on a highway, so negligently operated their automobiles as to cause plaintiff to veer the course of his automobile off the highway causing the injuries complained of, the court stating that it is appropriate to speak of concert of action and common purpose in actions wherein volition or purpose is one of the essentials, but that common negligence is a failure to exercise ordinary care, and the purpose of the wrongdoer has nothing whatever to do with its commission.—Dash v. Fairbanks, Morse & Co., 195 N.E. 413, 49 Ohio App. 57.

(3) However, in a subsequent opinion it was declared that the rule that joint liability for tort lies only where wrongdoers have acted in concert in the execution of a common purpose and where the want of care of each is of the same character as the want of care of the other applies in the case of injuries resulting from a collision between two motor vehicles and precludes a joint suit against both drivers where it appears that they were not acting in concert in the execution of a common purpose.—Davies v. Seasley, App., 34 N.E.2d 265.

Joinder of the person responsible for a motor vehicle injury and his insurer is discussed supra § 118.

Family purpose doctrine. In jurisdictions where the family purpose doctrine is applied so as to impose liability on the head of the family for the negligence of a member of the family having general authority to drive, discussed supra § 433, the head of the family and the member of the family operating the vehicle at the time the injury occurred may be joined as defendants,⁵⁷ or the head of the family may be sued separately.⁵⁸

Husband and wife. In jurisdictions where husband and wife are jointly liable for torts committed by the wife, as discussed in Husband and Wife § 219 a (3), it has been held that the husband is a necessary party in an action to recover damages for injuries caused by a motor vehicle driven by the wife.⁵⁹ The husband need not be joined, however, in an action against the wife for an injury for which she alone is answerable.⁶⁰ Where an injury is caused by the negligent operation of a vehicle owned jointly by a husband and wife, it has been held that the injured person may sue either the husband or wife or both.⁶¹

Owner and bailee. It has been held that a joint action may be maintained against the owner and bailee of a vehicle if, and only if, the owner and bailee exercised joint control at the time of the accident.⁶²

Owner and operator. Where, under statutes, the owner of a motor vehicle may be held liable for injuries caused by the negligent operation of the vehicle by another operating the vehicle with the owner's consent, express or implied, as discussed supra § 442, it has been held that the owner and the operator may be sued either jointly⁶³ or severally.⁶⁴ Apart from such statutes, in actions to recover damages for personal injuries predicated on the negligent operation of a motor vehicle wrongfully intrusted to an incompetent driver, it has been held proper to join the owner and driver as parties defendant.⁶⁵

Principal and agent and master and servant. In some jurisdictions it is held that the principal or master cannot be sued jointly with the driver where the master's liability is based solely on the rule of respondeat superior,⁶⁶ although the injured person may bring a suit against the driver or against

(1) The operator is not a necessary party in an action against the owner.—Davidson v. Ealey, 158 P.2d 1000, 69 Cal.App.2d 254—Sayles v. Peters, 54 P.2d 94, 11 Cal.App.2d 401—Carver v. Donin, 50 P.2d 835, 9

(2) This is true notwithstanding provisions of imputed liability statute providing that operator of vehicle whose negligence is imputed to owner shall be made a party defendant if personal service of process can be made on him within the state, and that on recovery of judgment recourse shall first be had to operator's property, and subrogating owner to all rights of person injured against operator, such provisions being intended to protect owner from results of operator's negligence in so far as possible as between operator and owner without interfering with rights of injured party.—Davidson v. rests is that while the law makes the master answerable for the negligent or wrongful act of the servant done within the scope of the agency, the negligent or wrongful act of the servant is neither in fact nor in legal intentment the joint act of the master and servant."—Raymond v. Capobianco, 178 A. 896, 898, 107 Vt. 295, 98 A.L.R. 1051.

Liability not based solely on respondeat superior

(1) Where the owner is an occupant of the car at the time of the accident, he and the operator may be joined, since the operator may have been negligent in the manner of operation and the owner in permitting it to be so operated.—Hoge v. Soissons, 192 N.E. 860, 48 Ohio App. 221.

(2) So, in action against master and servant, where petition, after alleging the relationship and the negligence of servant, also alleged that the master was negligent in employing the servant to drive automobile because latter was an incompetent driver, which fact was known to master, there was no misjoinder of parties.—Kaiser v. Rodenbaugh, Ohio Com.Pl., 68 N.E.2d 239.

(3) Similarly, it has been held that a petition charging that defendants were engaged in jointly operating vehicle causing injury is not demurrable as joining principal and agent in same action involving tort liability.—King v. Corporation of Liberty, Ind., 12 Ohio Supp. 147.

the principal or master.⁶⁷ In other jurisdictions the person injured is allowed to sue the principal and agent or master and servant jointly,⁶⁸ although he is not required to do so, and either may be sued separately.⁶⁹ Where a driver is employed by two or more persons, all may be joined as defendants.⁷⁰

Enforcement of lien. In an action to enforce a statutory lien for damages, it has been held that the owner of the vehicle is a necessary party,⁷¹ but the driver of the automobile, who was using it with the owner's permission, is not,⁷² unless a personal judgment is sought against him.⁷³

Facts wholly defeating plaintiff's claim

Under a statute permitting a defendant to bring in a third person if he shows that some third person, not a party to the action, is or will be liable to defendant, wholly or in part, for the claim made against defendant in the action where the showing made by defendant on a motion to bring in an additional de-

be joined on the theory of joint liability.⁸⁰ Where the third person is charged with liability as a several, rather than as a joint, tort-feasor, it has been held that no order should be granted bringing in such third person as an additional defendant except on notice to him.⁸¹

§ 501. Process

- a. In general
- b. Motor carriers

a. In General

As a general rule, process must be served in the manner authorized by statute.

Rules as to the nature, necessity, and modes of service in civil actions generally have been applied in actions for damages for injuries sustained as a result of the operation of a motor vehicle.⁸² Ordini-

narly, service of process in such actions is a statutory matter,⁸³ and unless a defendant is served with process in some manner authorized by statute the court is without authority to proceed.⁸⁴ The summons should clearly set forth the name of the one sued.⁸⁵ It is also generally true that a court's jurisdiction is confined to persons within the territorial jurisdiction of the court and service of process beyond such limits is ineffective to confer jurisdiction, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise.⁸⁶

A statute authorizing state-wide venue in certain actions involving motor vehicle accidents does not by necessary implication authorize state-wide service of process.⁸⁷ However, some statutes authorize service beyond the territorial limits of the court in which suit is properly brought.⁸⁸ Under a statute permitting an action against the owner to be defendant is that the original defendant will probably be able to adduce evidence that will result in wholly defeating plaintiff's claim, rather than evidence that may result in a joint judgment against the original defendant and the defendant sought to be added, it has been held that the motion should be denied.—Shuler v. Whitmore, Rauber & Vicinus, 246 N.Y.S. 528, 138 Misc. 814, affirmed 251 N.Y.S. 886, 233 App.Div. 892.

Locus delicti as governing contribution

Where the law of the place where the accident occurred does not allow contribution between joint tort-feasors, it has been held that the original defendant cannot add other alleged joint tort-feasors as parties.—Charnock v. Taylor, 26 S.E.2d 911, 223 N.C. 360, 148 A.L.R. 1126.

Necessary facts must appear

The petition must allege that plaintiff is a resident of the county and that defendant is the owner of the vehicle, or a motion will lie to quash service.—Stern v. Gimbel, 25 Ohio N.P., N.S., 211.

Action brought in county where damages occurred

(1) In actions for damages brought in the county where the alleged damages were sustained, under some statutes service may be made anywhere within the state.—Koll v. Pickford, 44 A.2d 276, 353 Pa. 118—Gossard v. Gossard, 178 A. 837, 319 Pa. 129—Wiesheier v. Kessler, 165 A. 854, 311 Pa. 380—Hartman v. Donahue, 16 A.2d 691, 142 Pa.Super. 382—Pickering v. Snyder, 27 Pa.Dist. 9.

(2) Such a statute has been held constitutional.—Garrett v. Turner, 84 A. 354, 235 Pa. 383.

(3) When officer of county other brought in the county wherein the injured person resides, and allowing process to issue against defendant or defendants in other counties, where an action is properly brought against the owner in the county in which the injured person resides, process may issue to another county as against one alleged to be jointly liable with the owner,⁸⁹ and, where defendant owner voluntarily appears and answers to the merits without service of summons on him, the action being rightly brought as to him, summons may issue to any other county to a joint defendant.⁹⁰ Under such statute, where joint defendants are nonresidents of the county wherein suit is brought and summons has been issued for them to another county, the averments of the petition and the proof on the trial must show that plaintiff has a valid joint cause of action against the defendants on whom valid service is had as well as against the nonresident defendants.⁹¹

Statute authorizing service on driver or custodian. A statute authorizing service on a nonresident owner of a motor vehicle by service on the chauffeur, operator, or custodian of the vehicle, and not containing any provision making it reasonably probable that notice of service will be communicated to the owner, has been held invalid.⁹²

Additional defendants. Any service of process authorized on an original defendant may be used to serve an additional defendant.⁹³ Under some rules of practice a defendant seeking to bring in additional defendants, has no greater rights in securing service than plaintiff had for service in the action.⁹⁴

b. Motor Carriers

In the absence of specific statutory provisions providing otherwise, the service of process in actions against motor carriers for injuries sustained as a result of the operation of a motor vehicle belonging to such carrier is governed by the rules applicable to civil actions generally.

In the absence of specific statutory provisions providing otherwise, the service of process in actions against motor carriers for damages for injuries sustained as a result of the operation of a motor vehicle belonging to such carrier is governed by the rules and statutory provisions applicable to civil actions generally.⁹⁵ Statutes specifically providing for the mode of service have been held valid,⁹⁶ and, being procedural, apply to causes of action arising prior thereto.⁹⁷ Some statutes authorize service on the carrier by service on certain agents or servants of the carrier.⁹⁸ Such a statute has been construed as not impairing or taking away any of the means for service already existing by law,⁹⁹ but, on the contrary, to be limited to cases where there is no other ample legal facility for the service of process.¹

Injury not due to operation of vehicle

Service on agent or servant held not sufficient to confer jurisdiction

a. In General

Statutes authorizing the commencement of a suit against a nonresident motorist by service on a state official as agent of the nonresident are within the power of the legislature to enact, and their validity has generally been upheld. Such statutes, being in derogation of common law, are strictly construed and must be strictly followed in order to secure the intended benefits.

The state may, as a condition precedent to the use of its highways by a nonresident motorist, require him to consent to the appointment of a state official as his agent for the acceptance of service of process in actions arising out of the operation of his motor vehicle within the state,³ or it may exclude a nonresident until a formal appointment is made,³ or declare that the use of its highways by the nonresident is the equivalent of the appointment of a state official as agent for the acceptance of the service of process;⁴ and the statutes usually make the mere operation of a motor vehicle upon the highway by a nonresident the equivalent of a formal appointment of a public officer as agent.⁵ The power of the state in the premises and the validity of statutes enacted pursuant thereto rest on the right of the state, in the exercise of its police powers, to prescribe regulations necessary for public safety and order in the operation of motor vehicles,⁶ and the validity of such statutes has generally been upheld,⁷ provided they contain provisions

Unless the statute contains a provision making it reasonably probable that the nonresident will receive actual notice, it will be entirely possible for a person injured to sue any nonresident he chooses, and through service on the state official obtain a default judgment against a nonresident who has never been in the state, who had nothing to do with the accident, or whose automobile having been in the state has never injured anybody, and a provision of law for service that leaves open such a clear opportunity for the commission of fraud or injustice is not a reasonable provision.—Wuchter v. Pizzutti, N.J., 48 S.Ct. 259, 276 U.S. 13, 72 L.Ed. 446, 57 A.L.R. 1230.

Presumption that agent will inform

A reasonable probability of communication of notice does not arise from the mere presumption that the statutory agent will inform his principal.—Webb Packing Co. v. Harmon, 196 A. 158, 9 W.W.Harr., Del., 22.

Actual notice does not cure invalidity

(1) The fact that nonresident has actual notice of suit does not render valid a statute under which the suit is brought, which permits service of process on state official without providing for notice to nonresident.—Kroll v. Nevada Indus. Corp., Nev., 191 P.2d 889.

(2) So, personal service on nonresident has been held not to supply constitutional validity to service on state official under invalid statute.—Wuchter v. Pizzutti, N.J., 48 S.Ct. 259, 276 U.S. 13, 72 L.Ed. 446, 57 A.L.R. 1230.

Plaintiff may mail notice

A statute is not invalid because permitting plaintiff himself to mail notice to motorist by registered mail.—State ex rel. Charette v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for Silver Bow County, 86 P.2d 750, 107 Mont. 489.

Absence of provision requiring return receipt held not to render statute unconstitutional.

The purpose of such statutes is to further the safety of highway traffic within the state,⁹ and to facilitate the enforcement of civil remedies by those injured in their person or property by nonresidents,¹⁰ by permitting such persons to enforce their rights in the courts of the state where the injury occurred instead of in the forums of defendant's domicile.¹¹ Although it has been said that such statutes were not intended for the benefit of the nonresident motorist,¹² he may benefit to some extent.¹³ The statutes are in derogation of common law,¹⁴ and must be strictly construed,¹⁵ except where such rule of construction has been abrogated,¹⁶ and a strict compliance with every requirement of such statutes is necessary in order to secure the benefits intended.¹⁷ It has been held that,

Power of equity to correct defects

The legislature, when it passed the statute regarding service of summons on nonresident motorists, did not intend that the court should apply such rigidity to observance of inconsequential procedural provisions of the law as to deprive equity of its inherent power to set aright in a judicial proceeding that which by inadvertence has become disarranged, and where plaintiff's counsel, through inadvertence, had omitted to file summons, complaint and affidavit of service within time prescribed by statute and there was no showing that defendant would be prejudiced, plaintiff's motion for leave to file summons, complaint, and affidavit of service would be granted "nunc pro tunc."—Kornfeld v. Hurwitz, 32 N.Y.S.2d 820, 178 Misc. 216.

However, in an early case it was held that the statute did not limit suit to the county where the accident occurred or provide that service of process can be made only by an officer of that county.—Aversa v. Aubry, 154 A. 311, 303 Pa. 139.

Rules of civil procedure held to define the limits of service of process on nonresident motorists in view of the rule making rules of civil procedure applicable if the law authorizes such service.—McCall v. Gates, 47 A.2d 211, 354 Pa. 158.

Resident and nonresident defendant

(1) Where action against original defendant, in whose automobile plaintiff was riding at time of collision, was brought in county where original defendant resided, and collision, which involved automobiles of original defendant and a nonresident, occurred in another county, service of process on nonresident, as additional defendant, by serving process on state official under original defendant's petition to bring in nonresident as an additional defendant, was held invalid.—Nathan v. McGinley, 16 A.2d 2, 340 Pa. 10.

(2) However, it has also been held that in such action the original defendants may properly join as additional defendant, by writ of scire facias, a nonresident allegedly responsible for the accident, and cause service of the writ of scire facias to be made on him under the nonresident service act.—McCauley v. First Nat. Bank of Greensburg, 37 Pa.Dist. & Co. 143.

To amend record of judgment

Where judgment was rendered in action against nonresident motorist and another for damages growing out of accident or collision, service of process in suit to amend record of the judgment in such action at law on commissioner of motor vehicles gave court jurisdiction of nonresident.—Hubley v. Goodwin, 4 A.2d 665, 90 N.H. 54.

Face of petition as determinative

(1) Under nonresident motorist statute, acquisition of jurisdiction by service of process authorized by its terms depends on what is disclosed on face of petition itself.—Kelley v. Koetting, 190 P.2d 361, 164 Kan. 542.

(2) An allegation, that defendant "at the time of the accident hereinabove referred to and at this time is a nonresident of this state," sufficiently alleged jurisdictional fact of nonresidence.—Mann v. Humphrey's Adm'x, 79 S.W.2d 17, 257 Ky. 647, 96 A.L.R. 584.

Duty of nonresident to inquire

On receipt of copy of writ and complaint, nonresident defendant must inquire into statutory provisions of state before whose court he is summoned.—Barbieri v. Pandiscio, 163 A. 469, 116 Conn. 48.

Process does not run outside state

Constructive process does not run into the other state, but finds defendant within the state of the action and there makes service on him through the agent appointed by his act, accompanied by due notice to himself.—Kroll v. Nevada Indus. Corp., Nev., 191 P.2d 889.

Removal to federal court

Once jurisdiction of the person of a nonresident motorist is acquired by the state courts by virtue of constructive service under the nonresident motorists' service statute, such courts are in no different position than in any other case where jurisdiction of the person has been acquired, in so far as the provisions of law dealing with the removal of causes from the state courts to the federal courts are concerned.—Cook v. in the absence of an express requirement.²² While including all actions or proceedings fairly intended to be covered thereby,²³ they should not be extended by implication²⁴ to include causes of action not described therein.²⁵ On the other hand, the legislature must be presumed to have intended a reasonable and practical result from the enactment of such statutes,²⁶ and they must be read together with

Mass.—O'Donnell v. Registrar of Motor Vehicles, 186 N.E. 657, 283 Mass. 375.

Procedural amendments

(1) A nonresident defendant had no substantive right requiring process to be served on the particular state official designated by statute as it existed when accident occurred rather than on state official designated by statute as it existed when action was commenced, since designation of the state official was a matter of procedure.—Zavis v. Warren, D.C.Wis., 35 F.Supp. 689.

(2) Where nonresident statute in force at time of accident provided for substituted service on commissioner of motor vehicle department, and between the time of accident and time action was commenced, legislature by amendment subsequently designated commissioner of public safety as officer on whom process should be served, and provided that department of public safety under commissioner thereof should constitute motor vehicle department for administration of the statute, it was held that there was no need for a retroactive operation of the amendment since remedy afforded by nonresident statute was not interrupted and service of process on commissioner of public safety was sufficient to give court jurisdiction.—Green v. Brinegar, 292 N.W. 229, 228 Iowa 477.

(3) So an amendment authorizing personal service of the required notices as an alternative to mailing has been held to be procedural and, therefore, applicable to actions brought after the adoption of the amendment, although the cause of action may have arisen prior thereto.—Duggan v. Ogden, 180 N.E. 301, 278 Mass. 432, 82 A.L.R. 765

by service of process on a designated state official.³⁰

b. Residence of Plaintiff as Affecting Right

In the absence of any provision in a statute authorizing service of process on a state official in an action against a nonresident motorist disclosing an intent to restrict the benefits of the statute to resident plaintiffs, the statute will not be so restricted.

A nonresident plaintiff may effect service on a nonresident motorist by means of service on a state official as agent for the nonresident defendant,³¹ unless the statute authorizing service of process on a state official in an action against a nonresident motorist discloses an intent on the part of the legislature to restrict the benefits of the statute to resident plaintiffs.³² A statutory amendment which omitted a provision limiting the right to use constructive service to residents has been held to have the effect of impliedly extending such right to nonresidents.³³ It is, of course, of no consequence that the benefits of the statute are restricted to resident plaintiffs where the proofs show that plaintiff is a resident,³⁴ and a foreign corporation registered and authorized to transact business within the state has been held to qualify as a resident,³⁵ as has a non-resident who has qualified as personal representative of the estate of a deceased resident.³⁶ It has also been held that, where one of two or more joint plaintiffs is a resident and the other or others are nonresidents, the one who is a resident may effect service under the statute.³⁷ Under a statute limited to the use of resident plaintiffs, it has been held that residence at the time the cause of action arose is the test of whether or not plaintiff is entitled to the statutory benefits,³⁸ and a nonresident plaintiff who falsely states in his complaint that he is a resident is estopped to assert that the defect was cured by defendant's general appearance, even though it appears that defendant knew that plaintiff resided outside the state at the time of suit.³⁹

c. Necessity of Accident Being within State upon Highway

Generally, statutes authorizing constructive service on nonresident motorists can be invoked only in actions involving accidents arising out of the use of public highways within the state.

Statutes providing for constructive or substituted service on nonresident motorists have been held to be limited to accidents or collisions occurring within the state.⁴⁰ Although there is authority to the Accident outside state

In an action against a motor carrier which had authorized the secretary of state under a statute to receive service for it, it was held that plaintiff was not entitled to the benefit of the statute where he was not a resident and the cause of action did not arise within the state.—Glazier v. Van Sant, D.C.Mo., 33 F.Supp. 113.

Reason for rule

The personal representative's suit was to enforce a cause of action belonging to a deceased resident of the state, and, while it is true that the cause of action is prosecuted for the benefit of deceased's heirs, a recovery would be in the right of deceased himself and, if deceased had survived and brought suit, or if on his death a suit had been brought by a resident administrator, in either case process would have been valid.—*Hunt v. contrary,⁴¹ it has also been held that the statutes are limited to actions involving accidents or negligent operation of a motor vehicle upon the public highways.⁴² In this connection, a public highway is a place to which the public has the right to go, and the use of which it has the right to have, under reasonable restrictions at all times,⁴³ and includes roads⁴⁴ and streets⁴⁵ open to the public. Under some statutes any road or alley, even if privately owned, is for the purposes of the statute considered a public highway,⁴⁶ but the only driveway which is considered as a public highway is a public driveway.⁴⁷ Of course, where the statute defines the term "public highway," it is controlling.⁴⁸ The fact that the operation of the statute is limited to the area within the boundaries of the highways does not mean that the causative force from which the damages flow must actually be limited to the confines of the highway;⁴⁹ it is only necessary that the causative force originate in the use or operation of the vehicle upon the highway.⁵⁰

d. Persons Subject to Constructive Service

(1) In General

Generally speaking, the terms of the statute authorizing constructive service on nonresident motorists determine the persons subject to constructive service thereunder.

While statutes authorizing service of process on a state official in an action against a nonresident motorist will not be extended by implication to include persons not clearly within their terms,⁵¹ the per-

Accident on interstate bridge

Service in action against nonresident for damages from collision on out-of-state side of center line of interstate bridge was held not authorized on ground that treaty between the states in question gave the state where the action was instituted exclusive jurisdiction over the waters between the states including the waters over which the bridge passed, since "exclusive jurisdiction" referred to police jurisdiction and was not intended to deprive the state yielding such exclusive jurisdiction of its prerogatives of sovereignty or any of territory granted by treaty.—Clarke v. Road not dedicated to public

The fact that a road which was used by the general public had never been dedicated or expropriated as a public road and was on private property owned by corporation which could close road to public use at any time could not deprive the road of its character as a "public highway."—Galloway v. sons included within the terms of such statutes depend on the language of the particular statute taken as a whole,⁵² and a court is not warranted, under the guise of strict construction, in nullifying the plain legislative intent by unduly limiting the persons subject thereto.⁵³ A statute which merely authorizes constructive service on a nonresident operating a motor vehicle within the state has been held to authorize constructive service on a nonresident only where he was personally engaged in the operation of the mechanism of the vehicle,⁵⁴ and not to authorize constructive service on nonresidents whose vehicles are driven within the state by their agents, servants, or employees.⁵⁵

On the other hand, a statute authorizing constructive service in case of a nonresident's "use and operation" of a motor vehicle within the state has been held to evidence an intent to include persons other than the actual operator of the vehicle,⁵⁶ and to authorize constructive service on nonresidents operating vehicles through their agents, servants, or employees.⁵⁷ The same result has been reached under a statute authorizing constructive service on a nonresident in charge of the use and operation of a vehicle,⁵⁸ or where the vehicle is being operated for the nonresident or under his control or direction, express or implied,⁵⁹ and under other statutes manifesting an intent, expressed

Owner-passenger as operating vehicle

In Ohio

(1) It has been held that the term "operator" within the meaning of the statute authorizing constructive service on nonresident owners and operators means one for whose purposes motor vehicle is being operated, as well as one physically operating it, so as to render nonresident employer of one driving his own automobile for such employer's purposes in state amenable to constructive service of process.—Pray v. Meier, 40 N.E.2d 850, 69 Ohio App. 141, dissenting opinion 43 N.E.2d 318, 69 Ohio App. 141.

(2) It has also been held, however, that the term "operator," as used in such statute, applies only to person actually controlling driving and steering mechanism of ve-

"And" construed as "or"

Furtherance of defendant's business

In order to sustain service under such a statute, it must appear that vehicle was being operated for defendant on allegation that it was being used to further and transact defendant's business.—Kirchner v. N. & W. Overall Co., D.C.S.C., 16 F.Supp. 915.

or implied, to authorize constructive service on nonresidents operating motor vehicles through their agents, servants, or employees.⁶⁰ Under such statutes, it has been held that the fact that the agent or servant is a resident of the state does not preclude service on his nonresident principal or master,⁶¹ and that the question of the master's or principal's liability vel non is not required to be determined in advance in order to obtain process.⁶²

The statutes do not authorize constructive service on a nonresident where no contractual relationship whatever exists between the nonresident and the driver of the vehicle causing the injury;⁶³ nor do they authorize service on a nonresident employing an independent contractor to work for him.⁶⁴

While the fact that the vehicle involved in the accident was being operated with the permission of the owner, express or implied, does not of itself make the driver thereof the agent or employee of the owner within a statute authorizing constructive service in such cases,⁶⁵ under a statute so providing, nonresidents whose vehicles are being operated within the state by another with the permission of the owner, express or implied, are subject to constructive service of process.⁶⁶ Some statutes have been held not to be limited to nonresident natural persons, but to include every nonresident, individual, member of a partnership, or corporation using and operating a motor vehicle over the state highways.⁶⁷

Action within scope of employment presumed

It has been held that, when it is shown that a master and servant or principal and agent relationship exists, a presumption arises that the servant or agent causing the injury was acting within the scope of his employment and that this presumption is sufficient to sustain the court's jurisdiction over his nonresident master or principal.—*Rose v. Ownership of vehicle. A statute, the title of which limited its application to nonresident owners, has been held not to authorize constructive service of process on nonresident operators or drivers who are not owners.⁶⁸ Under other statutes, the nonresident's ownership or lack of ownership of the vehicle involved in an accident has been held to be immaterial as respects his amenability to constructive service of process,⁶⁹ and the fact that the vehicle is owned by the agent or servant driving it has been held not to preclude constructive service on the driver's principal or master.⁷⁰ Under still other statutes, however, this fact has been held to preclude such service on the nonresident principal or master.⁷¹

(2) Personal Representatives of Deceased Nonresident

Unless otherwise provided, a nonresident's personal representative is not amenable to constructive service under a statute relating to service of process on nonresident motorists.

Employment of licensed and registered owner

(1) It has been held that an indirect acceptance by nonresident of rights and privileges conferred by state laws, permitting operation of motor vehicles in state, as follows from such nonresident's employment of duly licensed and registered resident owner of motor vehicle, does not permit constructive service on employer under a statute authorizing such service in suit against nonresident operator or user of highway for any collision in which he may be involved by reason of the operation "by him, for him, or under his control or direction, express or implied."

Revival of action against representative

Action against nonresident motorist who was served by executing service on state official cannot be revived against foreign executor of motorist on motorist's death during pendency of action.—Riggs v. Schneider's Ex'r, 130 S.W.2d 816, 279 Ky. 361.

Statute providing for continuing action

Statute providing that actions for injuries to person or property may be continued against executors or administrators was held not to permit service on personal representative of deceased nonresident owner or operator of automobile.—Vecchione v. Palmer, 291 N.Y.S. 537, 249 App. Div. 661.

75. Ark.—Oviatt v. Garretson, 171 S. W.2d 287, 205 Ark. 792.

on the personal representatives of a deceased non-resident motorist may be validly effected by service on the proper state official,⁷⁶ although it has been stated that, if a statute was amended to permit such service, it would be futile, since it would assume to subject such personal representative to a suit in personam.⁷⁷

(3) Who Are Nonresidents

Whether or not a particular person is a nonresident within the meaning of a statute authorizing constructive service on nonresident motorists depends on the application of the general rules consistent with the purpose of the statutes.

76. Ark.—Oviatt v. Garretson, supra.

77. N.Y.—Vecchione v. Palmer, 291 N.Y.S. 537, 249 App.Div. 661.

Colo.—Carlson v. District Court of City and County of Denver, 180 P.2d 525, 116 Colo. 330.

Tex.—United Services Automobile Ass'n v. Harman, Civ.App., 151 S.W.2d 609, error dismissed, judgment correct, certiorari denied 62 S.Ct. 640, 315 U.S. 807, 86 L.Ed. 1206.

"Nonresident," within statute, refers to an out-of-state person who comes to state for a temporary sojourn, whether he is a transient who is merely journeying through the state or one who has come for temporary purposes, which might or might not, later, result in the determination to remain for a considerable period, if not permanently, and, while it is not necessary that a person from out-of-state acquire a domiciliary residence in order not to be classified as a nonresident, a stay in the state of such length coupled with an intention to remain long enough, that presence in the state cannot be classified as merely temporary, is essential.—Briggs v. Superior Court of Alameda County, 183 P.2d 758, 81 Cal.App.2d 240.

Domicile

(1) "Residence" has been held synonymous with "domicile" within such statutes.—Northwestern Mortgage & Security Co. v. Noel Const. Co., 300 N.W. 28, 71 N.D. 256.

(2) It has also been held, however, that actual residence and not domicile is the proper test in applying the statute.—Uslan v. Woronoff, 18 N.Y.S.2d 222, 173 Misc. 693, affirmed 21 N.Y.S.2d 613, 259 App.Div. 1093, reargument denied 22 N.Y.S.2d 464, 259 App.Div. 1117.

Out-of-state license

(1) The mere fact that a person's motor vehicle bears an out-of-state license does not make him a nonresident.—Carlson v. District Court of City and County of Denver, 180 P.2d 525, 116 Colo. 330.

(2) Such fact, however, together with other facts, may be sufficient to establish nonresidence.—Higham v. Poor, 158 S.E. 548, 201 N.C. 14.

Military personnel and wives

(1) Where member of armed forces from another state was stationed in state of forum for a long time prior to date of automobile collision, and he stated that he became a resident of state of forum several months before collision and continued to be such until after collision, and there was no evidence that he was a nonresident, he was not a "nonresident."—Berger v. Superior Court in and for Yuba County, 179 P.2d 600, 79 Cal.App.2d 425.

(2) So, the wife of a member of the armed forces temporarily assigned to duty within state and living there for several years has been held not to be a "nonresident," although she and her husband may have retained their citizenship in some other state and may not have acquired citizenship in state of forum, and fact that at time of automobile accident she was driving her father's car which was registered in another state or that she did or did not hold a local operator's license, does not affect the question of her residence.—Suit v. Shaller, D.C.Md., 18 F.Supp. 568.

(3) It has been held, however, that a member of the armed forces domiciled in one state, who was pursuant to military orders transferred to a military reservation within territorial boundaries of another state and who had no place of abode except the barracks on reservation, was a "nonresident" of the latter state, the court distinguishing the Suit case in the preceding note in that there the wife did not live on a military reservation and was not subject to military orders.—United Services Automobile Ass'n v. Harman, Tex.Civ.

The question whether or not a particular person is a nonresident within the meaning of a statute authorizing constructive service on nonresident motorists depends on the application of general principles and rules consistent with the purpose of the statutes and the evil to be remedied.⁷⁸ A foreign corporation having an office and place of business within the state, in charge of an agent on whom service of a suit against it can be lawfully made, has been held not to be a nonresident within the meaning of the law,⁷⁹ but the mere fact that a foreign corporation is registered under the laws of the state in which suit is brought has been held not to deprive it of its status as a nonresident.⁸⁰

(4) Husband and wife who came to state after husband as a member of the navy received permanent duty orders and who stated that they then intended to reside permanently in the state but who, in fact, remained in the state only one month and twelve days altogether and left the state two days after his discharge from the navy without awaiting outcome of application for a civil service position, and later took up permanent residence in another state, were "nonresidents" within statute authorizing service of process on director of motor vehicles when a nonresident is sued for damages arising out of an automobile accident within the state.—Briggs v. Superior Court of Alameda County, 183 P.2d 758, 81 Cal.App.2d 240.

Person attending college outside of state was held to be a "nonresident."—Uslan v. Woronoff, 18 N.Y.S.2d 222, 173 Misc. 693, affirmed 21 N.Y.S.2d 613, 259 App.Div. 1093, reargument 22 N.Y.S.2d 464, 259 App.Div. 1117.

Nonresident law not exclusive

The provisions with respect to jurisdiction of a nonresident using the highways are not exclusive, but give to aggrieved party a choice regarding the manner in which an original notice may be served in action against nonresident corporation for damages growing out of an automobile accident, one of which is by service on agent appointed by corporation.—Schoulte v. Great Lakes Forwarding Corporation, 298 N.W. 914, 230 Iowa 812.

80. Pa.—Strosser v. Universal Atlas Cement Co., 28 Pa.Dist. & Co. 646, 45 Lanc.L.Rev. 425.

(4) Time of Nonresidence

Unless otherwise provided, the application of statutes authorizing constructive service on nonresident motorists depends on whether or not defendant was a nonresident at the time the cause of action accrued.

Unless otherwise provided,⁸¹ the application of statutes authorizing constructive or substituted service on nonresident motorists depends on whether or not defendant was a nonresident at the time the injury giving rise to the cause of action occurred, and his residence or nonresidence at a time subsequent thereto is immaterial.⁸² Thus, unless it is otherwise provided, either expressly or by necessary implication,⁸³ such statutes do not apply to one who was a resident of the state wherein the action is commenced at the time the injury occurred, but became a nonresident thereafter prior to the time of the attempted service.⁸⁴ This has been held to be true notwithstanding it was defendant's intention when he started the journey during which the injury occurred to establish a residence outside the state.⁸⁵

(2) Notice to nonresident

(3) Affidavit of compliance

(1) In General

Statutes authorizing constructive service on nonresident motorists have been held not to contemplate that the process be other than that issued where the defendant is a resident, but statutory provisions governing the mode of service on the state official must be observed.

Statutes authorizing constructive service on nonresident motorists have been held not to contemplate that the process or original notice be other than that issued where defendant is a resident.⁸⁶ The process need name only the nonresident motorist as defendant,⁸⁷ and need not be directed to the state official as agent or attorney in fact for the nonresident.⁸⁸ A mistake in the name of defendant may be corrected by an appropriate motion.⁸⁹

Mode of service on state official. Statutory provisions governing the mode of service on the state official must be observed,⁹⁰ and under some statutory provisions service may be effected either by mail or by personal service.⁹¹ It has been held that the summons may be served on the proper state official by plaintiff, himself, notwithstanding

Copy of court order directing service pursuant to statute was held not required to be served on state official.—State ex rel. Dresden v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for Bernalillo County, 112 P.2d 506, 45 N.M. 119.

Service on a nonresident motorist has been held to be complete when service is made on the state official without regard to when the nonresident motorist receives notice.⁹⁴ Service on the state official has been held not to be complete when process is deposited in the mails addressed to him, but is complete only when it is in fact received by him.⁹⁵

(2) Notice to Nonresident

Statutory provisions requiring notice to the nonresident motorist must be complied with.

Under the various statutes relating to constructive service of process on nonresident motorists, unless personal service is required,⁹⁶ a copy of the complaint,⁹⁷ summons or citation,⁹⁸ and notice of service on the proper state official⁹⁹ must be sent by mail to defendant at his last known address. Where the statute merely directs that the required papers be sent by mail, it has been held that either registered or regular mail may be employed,¹ and under some statutes personal service is a substitute for mailing.² Such provisions are calculated to give defendant adequate notice of the pendency of the action or proceeding,³ and to make it reasonably certain that notice will reach defendant.⁴ Unless there is compliance with these provisions, the court is without jurisdiction;⁵ the giving of notice is an indispensable step in completing service on a nonresident motorist,⁶ and it has been held that actual knowledge acquired in any other than the specified manner will not suffice to confer jurisdiction,⁷ but the statutes have been held not to re-

Person designated by secretary of state

Under a statute directing service to be made on the secretary of state or someone designated by him in his office, it has been held that the intentment of the statute is met by the service of process, in the absence of the secretary of state, on the official who, in his absence, by the direction of the secretary of state and in accordance with the established practice of the department, acts for and in the place of the secretary of state within the department and particularly with respect to the service of process under the statute, and a designation in writing is unnecessary.—Rubin v. Service in foreign country

(1) A nonresident motorist, on whom personal service was made in foreign country by duly qualified officer, was properly served with process under provision that personal service of notice of service and copy of summons and complaint on defendant wherever found outside state is equivalent of mailing.—Silver Swan Liquor Corporation v. Adams, 110 P.2d 1097, 43 Cal.App.2d Supp. 851.

(2) However, a statute authorizing delivery of the required papers to defendant personally "without the state" by an attorney qualified to practice in that "state" has been held not to authorize service on a defendant in a foreign country, since the mention of the specific territory embraced within the statute implied the exclusion of other territories.—

Scott v. Dickerson, 8 N.Y.S.2d 656, 169 Misc. 1047.

Actual notice

It has been broadly stated that actual notice to defendant is necessary.—Alexander v. Bush, 134 S. W. 2d 519, 199 Ark. 562

Receipt by defendant personally

(1) The fact that a letter containing the required notice is not handed to defendant personally has been held to be immaterial—Gesell v. (2) A nonresident may by his conduct adopt or ratify the act of another in receiving the notice for him.—Gesell v. Wells, supra.

In Virginia

(1) It has been stated that the statute provides for the process or notice to be forthwith sent to defendant or defendants and that plaintiff does not meet the requirement by showing that anything less than that was done, as, for instance, by showing that the director of motor vehicles sent a copy of the summons or notice addressed to defendant at his last known post-office address.—Weiss v. Magnussen, D.C.Va., 13 F. Supp. 948.

(2) However, it has also been stated that a reasonable interpretation of the legislative intent would appear to be that such notice be sent to a place or address at which it is probable the notice will be received by the addressee.—Powell v. Knight, D.C.Va., 74 F.Supp. 191.

Although citations to employer and employee were switched in letters addressed to each separately, where letters contained copies of petition, sufficient compliance with the statutory requirements was held shown.—Allen v. Campbell, La.App., 141 So. 827.

Omission of complaint

Mailing of summons of service has been held sufficient to confer jurisdiction over defendant, although complaint was not mailed with the summons, omission being a mere irregularity.—Stewart v. Transcontinental Car Forwarding Co. of Akron, Ohio, 7 N.Y.S. 2d 926, 169 Misc. 427.

Notice before service

Notice of the serving and filing of process on the proper state official cannot be mailed prior to the performance of that act.—State ex rel. Stevens v. Grimm, 213 N.W. 475, 192 Wis. 601, followed in 213 N.W. 476, 192 Wis. 605.

"Forthwith"

(1) "Forthwith", as used in a statute requiring notice of service on the state official to be mailed to the nonresident forthwith, has been held to mean with due diligence under all the circumstances.—Reynolds v. Dorrance, C.C.A.Va., 94 F.2d 184.

(2) Similarly, such statute has been construed as meaning notice must be sent with all reasonable dispatch after return of service, and, in any event, before the rule day for filing declaration.—Webb Packing Co. v. Harmon, Del., 196 A. 158, 9 W.W.Harr. 22.

(3) So, where notices were originally sent to wrong address, but were promptly mailed to defendant's correct address when it was ascertained, and were received by defendant in ample time for him to appear, notices were sent "forthwith."—Reynolds v. Dorrance, C.C.A.Va., 94 F.2d 184.

(4) A delay of three days has been held not to constitute a failure to mail "forthwith"—Devier v. George Cole Motor Co., D.C.Va., 27 F.Supp. 978.

Notice of effect of service on statutory agent must be regarded as a material and inseparable part of process where legislature has directed it—Webb Packing Co. v. Harmon, supra—Webb Packing Co. v. Harmon, 193 A. 596, 8 W.W.Harr., Del., 476—Biddle v. Boyd, 193 A. 593, 8 W.W.Harr., Del., 469—Felstead v. Eastern Shore Express, 160 A. 910, 5 W.W.Harr., Del., 171.

Notice of service held sufficient

Notice informing defendant that suit had been brought against her that copy of summons was being inclosed, and that under law that was as effectual as if service had been made on her personally in this state, although not expressly informing defendant that summons had been served on state official under statute, was sufficient compliance with statute where copy of summons inclosed revealed fact—Biddle v. Boyd, 193 A. 593, 8 W.W.Harr., Del., 469.

The omission of the middle initial or the insertion of an erroneous initial in the place of the correct one of a defendant will not of itself operate to invalidate notice given by mail.—Schaaf v. Brown, 200 S.W.2d 909, 304 Ky. 466.

sonably probable that defendant will receive actual notice, he should not be permitted to evade the statute on technical grounds by acts of his own.¹³

Address. Where the statute directs that notice or process be mailed to the nonresident motorist, it has been held that a letter mailed to his last known or supposed address does not meet the requirements of the statute,¹⁴ but a letter mailed to an address at which, it is probable, delivery will be made satisfies the statutory requirements.¹⁵ The requirement that notice be mailed to his "last known address" does not mean his present address;¹⁶ nor does it mean his last address known to plaintiff,¹⁷ but the last known address to persons who would be expected to know it.¹⁸ Plaintiff must exercise due diligence to ascertain the last known address of the nonresident motorist,¹⁹ and, as far as it is reasonably possible to ascertain the address, plaintiff must do so at his peril.²⁰ It has been held, however, that plaintiff has a right to rely on the address given by the nonresident motorist to the proper public authority at the time of the accident.²¹ Where the nonresident motorist actually receives the notice mailed, service is not invalid by reason of the fact that it was addressed to him at a place other than his residence,²² such as his place of business,²³ or at the place of business of a third person.²⁴ A letter addressed to the nonresident motorist, care of general delivery in the city or town of his residence, has been held insufficient in the absence of evidence that he knew of the presence of the letter at the post office and failed or refused to call for it.²⁵

Return receipt. Under some statutes, where notice is attempted by registered mail, the nonresident's return receipt is required to be filed in the proceedings,²⁶ and such receipt must comply with the statutory requirements.²⁷ Where the nonresi-dent motorist refuses to accept a registered letter containing the required documents, he will not be heard to complain that he has not received actual notice or that there has not been strict compliance with all the provisions of the act,²⁸ such as the filing of a return receipt.²⁹ A nonresident motorist who refuses to accept delivery of a letter containing the required notice cannot complain of the alleged failure to comply with a statutory requirement that the receipt bear the motorist's signature.³⁰

(3) Affidavit of Compliance

Under statutes so providing, constructive service on a nonresident motorist is valid only if an affidavit of compliance with the statutory requirements is duly made and filed.

Under statutes so providing, constructive service on a nonresident motorist is valid and effective only if an affidavit of compliance with the statutory requirements is made by the proper person,³¹ and is properly filed.³² Under some statutes, such affidavit is required to be made by plaintiff or someone in his behalf,³³ but, under others, the statutory agent or someone acting on his behalf is the proper person to make the affidavit.³⁴ Where defendant refuses to receive a registered letter containing the requisite notice and instruments, an affidavit of compliance in the exact terms of the statute cannot and need not be filed.³⁵

f. Proceedings to Vacate Service

If the constructive service or return of process is defective, a motion may be made to vacate or quash the service or return.³⁶ On such motion, a showing of the facts essential to jurisdiction is necessary in order to defeat the motion,³⁷ and the nonresidence of defendant cannot be assumed,³⁸ but must be proved.³⁹ It has been held that issues arising on such motions may be determined on the basis of the pleadings and affidavits presented.⁴⁰ If, however,

g. Application and Effect of Statutes in Courts of Limited Jurisdiction

The operation of a statute authorizing constructive service on nonresident motorists has been held not to be limited to courts of general original jurisdiction.

The operation of a statute authorizing constructive service on nonresident motorists has been held not to be limited to courts of general original jurisdiction, but to apply as well to courts of limited or inferior jurisdiction,⁴³ and by statute in at least one state the territorial jurisdiction of inferior courts has been extended so that service of summons can be made on a nonresident motorist by service on the state official designated as the agent for the acceptance of service of process of nonresident motorists.⁴⁴ Under an amendment to a statute authorizing constructive service on nonresident motorists, which amendment added the words "and within the territorial jurisdiction of the court from which the summons issues," any court having jurisdiction of the subject matter can acquire jurisdiction over the person of a nonresident when service is made in the prescribed manner on the designated state official, even though such service is made outside the territorial limits of the court from which the summons issues.⁴⁵

Amendment held not invalid

Such amendment, as applied to county courts, has been held not unconstitutional as an attempt by legislature to confer jurisdiction on county courts which they do not possess under constitution.—La Placa v. Hutcheson, 79 N.Y.S.2d 355, 191 Misc. 27.

Amendment held not retroactive

N.Y.—Gruber v. Wilson, 11 N.E.2d 568, 276 N.Y. 135.

Prior to amendment

(1) Prior to the amendment, it was held that the statute did not authorize the process of courts of inferior jurisdiction to go beyond their territorial jurisdiction and that the process of such courts, outside of the county where the state official designated as agent for the acceptance of service of process against nonresidents maintained his official office, was ineffective when served on him at such office.—Gruber v. Wilson, 11 N.E.2d 568, 276 N.Y. 135—Skyer v. Williamson, 278 N.Y.S. 668, 155 Misc. 18—Bischoff v. Schnepf, 249 N.Y.S. 49, 139 Misc. 293—*Heils v. Horowitz, 240 N.Y.S. 683, 135 Misc. 744—Tannenbaum v. Wehrle, 233 N.Y.S. 316, 133 Misc. 577.

(2) However, there was authority to the effect that the state official designated as agent for the acceptance of service of process against nonresidents was deemed to be constructively present in every part of the state and that service on such official by mailing the summons to him at his principal office was deemed to have been made within the territorial jurisdiction of the inferior court.—Bessan v. Public Service Co-Ordinated Transport, 237 N.Y.S. 689, 135 Misc. 368.

Branch office

(1) An amendment authorizing the service of summons in actions against a nonresident at a branch office of the designated state official was held not to permit the process of a local court to be served on such state official beyond the territorial limits of the court.—Gruber v. Wilson, 11 N.E.2d 568, 276 N.Y. 135.

(2) However, even prior to this amendment, it was held that service on the proper state official at a branch office maintained by him within the territorial limits of the inferior tribunal was effective to confer jurisdiction.—Recktenwalt v. Donovan, 290 N.Y.S. 890, 161 Misc. 109—Teplitzky v. Lippman, 256 N.Y.S. 410, 143 Misc. 244—Stolber v. Marinacci, 254 N.Y.S. 620, 142 Misc. 345, affirmed 255 N.Y.S. 932, 235 App.Div. 714—Salzman v. Attrean, 254 N.Y.S. 283, 142 Misc. 245—*Berkowitz v. Common-law negligence

In action for injuries sustained in automobile accident, complaint, which was in one paragraph, alleging that plaintiff was riding with defendant as a guest, without alleging that plaintiff was being transported without payment therefor, and that defendant carelessly, negligently, wantonly and willfully failed to observe a stop sign, failed to stop and look for approaching cars on an intersecting road, and drove directly into the path of an oncoming car, alleged a cause of action on theory of common-law negligence.—Ott v. is not necessary to allege the ownership of a car operated by plaintiff⁵⁷ or the manner of appointment of a guardian suing on behalf of a minor.⁵⁸ It has been held to be improper to allege that defendant was insured,⁵⁹ that he failed to register his automobile and place a number thereon,⁶⁰ or, in an action by a passenger, that the driver of the automobile lost his life by reason of the accident.⁶¹ Sometimes allegations of unnecessary matters are treated as harmless or immaterial surplusage,⁶² while others are regarded as improper and prejudicial.⁶³

Demurrer. The general rules and statutes governing demurrers to declarations, petitions, or complaints in civil actions generally, discussed in the C.J.S. title Pleading §§ 231-238, also 49 C.J. p 387 note 16 et seq, are applicable to a demurrer interposed in an action to recover damages occasioned by the negligent operation of a motor vehicle.⁶⁴

Amendment. The rules governing the amendment of pleadings in civil actions generally are applicable to the amendment of a petition, declaration, or complaint in an action to recover damages arising from the negligent operation of a motor vehicle.⁶⁵ Where a complaint is merely defective, it has been held that it may be amended, even after the statute of limitations has run, if it seeks to declare on the same cause of action involved in the original complaint.⁶⁶

§ 505. — Allegations of Particular Matters

- a. Duty and responsibility of defendant
- b. Breach of duty or negligence
- c. Proximate cause
- d. Negating defenses

a. Duty and Responsibility of Defendant

- (1) In general
- (2) Duty at place of accident or collision
- (3) Relation between plaintiff and defendant
- (4) Relation between defendant and driver

(1) In General

The plaintiff's pleading must sufficiently aver the duty of the defendant to use due care not to injure him, and the responsibility of the defendant for failure so to do. What are necessary and proper averments depend largely on the facts and circumstances of the particular case.

In an action to recover damages for injuries occasioned by the negligent operation of a motor vehicle, the declaration, petition, or complaint must show that defendant owed plaintiff a duty to use due care not to injure him.⁶⁷ This duty should be shown, not by direct averment,⁶⁸ but by a statement of facts from which the law raises or implies a duty owing by defendant to plaintiff⁶⁹ at the time of the accident.⁷⁰ The complaint must allege facts showing that the automobile was under the control of defendant,⁷¹ or that he owed plaintiff a duty of

A complaint, alleging that individual defendant was an officer, servant, agent, or employee of corporate defendant, and while acting within scope of his authority caused, allowed, or permitted an automobile truck under his control to come in contact with truck occupied by plaintiff's intestate, was demurrable for failure to allege that individual defendant had actual manual control of truck or was present directing its movements.—Smith v. Tripp, 20 So. 2d 870, 246 Ala. 421.

In order to show a duty of control resting on defendant, it is necessary to allege either ownership⁷⁴ or operation⁷⁵ of the automobile by him. Where the action is against the owner of the car and the complaint shows that the car was operated by a person other than the owner at the time of the injury, it must allege facts to show defendant's ownership of the car,⁷⁶ or what, if any, relation defendant or his servant had to the vehicle,⁷⁷ and that the driver was responsible for the accident;⁷⁸ but an allegation of ownership of the automobile by defendant is of itself sufficient to show his responsibility for its operation⁷⁹ and need not be accompanied by allegations showing whether, at the time of the accident, it was being driven by him or someone else,⁸⁰ or with his knowledge or consent.⁸¹ An allegation that injury was caused by a vehicle negligently operated by defendant, his agents, servants, or employees is sufficient without alleging ownership by defendant.⁸² Where the action is against the driver of the vehicle, no averment of ownership is necessary.⁸³

Use of automobile in defendant's business. In an action against the owner of an automobile it is not necessary to allege that the automobile was being used in defendant's business at the time of the injury, whether the action is based on the negligence of the owner,⁸⁴ or where it is alleged that the car was operated by an agent, servant, or employee,⁸⁵ although in the latter case it is better pleading to aver distinctly that the car was being operated at the time on defendant's business.⁸⁶

Duty to make and enforce rules. A count based on defendant's duty to make and enforce rules restricting or regulating the speed of its vehicle when driven upon the streets of a city is defective where it does not allege such facts as would give rise to the duty relied on.⁸⁷

(2) Duty at Place of Accident or Collision

As a general rule the declaration, petition, or complaint must sufficiently aver that at the time of the accident or collision the plaintiff or his property was at a place where the defendant owed him a duty to use due care to avoid injuring the plaintiff or his property.

As a general rule, the declaration, petition, or complaint must allege facts showing that, at the time of the accident or collision, plaintiff or his property was at a place where defendant owed plaintiff a duty to use due care not to injure the person or property of plaintiff;⁸⁸ but where the requisite facts are alleged it is not necessary to charge the legal conclusion that the duty existed.⁸⁹

Where it is charged that defendant had the right to control and direct the use of an automobile and was assisting in driving it, using the driver as an instrumentality, such charge is an allegation of joint action and joint negligence and amounts to a charge of negligence against the defendant personally based on his own acts.—Palmer v. Individual ownership of several defendants Colo.—Conner v. Sullivan, 272 P. 623, 84 Colo. 572.

Ownership by municipality

(1) A declaration alleging that city owned certain automobile truck, that truck was being operated by certain individual with knowledge and consent of city, on city streets, and that the driver negligently operated the truck into plaintiff's automobile, injuring plaintiff and his automobile, stated a cause of action against the city.—City of Tampa v. Easton, 198 So. 753, 146 Fla. 188.

(2) A declaration, alleging that a fire engine truck, owned by city, while being operated on streets of the city by city employee, acting within scope of his employment, and with knowledge and consent of the city, was negligently and recklessly driven into plaintiff's motorcycle, stated a cause of action against city for resulting damages to motorcycle and injuries to plaintiff.—Barth v. Mont.—Johnson v. Herring, 295 P. 1100, 89 Mont. 156.

89. Ala.—Maddox v. Jones, 89 So. 38, 205 Ala. 598.

When the injuries were sustained on a highway, it is necessary⁹⁰ and sufficient⁹¹ to allege facts showing that the highway was a public highway. An allegation that plaintiff was lawfully using a public sidewalk need not allege the purpose for which it was being used.⁹²

(3) Relation between Plaintiff and Defendant

There must be sufficient averment of a relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant giving rise to a duty owing by the defendant to the plaintiff.

A relationship between plaintiff and defendant giving rise to a duty to exercise care owing by defendant to plaintiff must be averred.⁹³ In an action against the owner of an automobile by a person who was riding therein, plaintiff must aver some relation to defendant other than the mere fact that he was riding in the automobile when injured;⁹⁴ in such case it is necessary and sufficient to aver plaintiff's relation to defendant as that of passenger,⁹⁵ guest,⁹⁶ or employee engaged in service at the time.⁹⁷ Allegations merely that plaintiff was lawfully riding in defendant's vehicle import only that plaintiff was a licensee of the owner⁹⁸ and that the only duty owed by defendant to plaintiff was not willfully or wantonly to injure him.⁹⁹ In an action for negligence, a petition admitting that the injured person was a trespasser does not state a case.¹

(4) Relation between Defendant and Driver

Where the defendant was not the driver of the vehicle at the time of the injury, his relationship to, and responsibility for the acts of, the driver must be properly pleaded.

Where the action is against the owner and the complaint shows that the vehicle was operated by another at the time of the injury, it must ordinarily allege facts showing that the operator was an agent, servant, or employee,² or, where such is the case,

Driver acting outside scope of employment

Under the rule that the owner of a vehicle is not liable to one riding therein as guest of the driver who is acting outside the scope of his employment, a petition showing that plaintiff was injured while such a guest states no cause of action against the owner.—Beard v. Oliver, 182 S.E. 921, 52 Ga.App. 229.

"Passenger"

(1) The word "passenger" in declaration sufficiently designates plaintiff's relationship.—Elmer v. Miller, 255 Ill.App. 465.

(2) Averment that occupant was a passenger in automobile at time of accident does not preclude recovery against driver, since "passenger" includes status of invitee as well as that of licensee.—Cafaro v. Cafaro, 184 A 779, 14 N.J.Misc 331, reversed on other grounds 191 A. 472, 118 N. J.Law 123.

Ridout's Ambulance, Inc., 102 So. 906, 212 Ala. 428.

(2) In action for injuries allegedly caused by truck owned by employee of produce company and driven by employee's guest, pleadings proceeding on theory that guest was servant of produce company within doctrine of respondeat superior, was error.—West Texas Produce Co. v. Alternative allegations

N.Y.—Johansson v. Kemp, 207 N.Y. S. 468, 211 App Div. 276.

Effect of statute

A statute making registration of automobile prima facie evidence of ownership and proof that operation was for owner's benefit, related entirely to matters of evidence, and did not dispense with necessity for proper pleadings as essential predicate of judgment against owner for injury resulting from driver's negligent operation of automobile.—Curtis v. Kyte, 106 S.W.2d 234, 21 Tenn. App. 115.

Necessary allegations

Where declaration of automobile occupant in action for personal injuries did not allege that stated owner of automobile was negligent operator or allege the relationship between alleged owner and operator so as to invoke operation of respondeat superior doctrine and did not allege that operator was using automobile with knowledge, permission, acquiescence, or authority of owner, so as to make owner liable for negligent operation of automobile, the declaration was fatally defective.—McDougald v. Couey, 200 So. 391, 145 Fla. 689.

that the operator was a partner,³ of defendant, and that he was acting within the scope of his employment at the time,⁴ and the pleading must show whether the negligence relied on is that of defendant or of his agent.⁵ A further allegation that the driver was using his own car does not negative liability of the employer.⁶ A special custom permitting an employee to use the employer's cars, in order to be relied on, must be pleaded.⁷

It is sufficient to allege that the owner of the automobile, with knowledge of the incompetency of another person, intrusted the automobile to the latter person;⁸ and this rule constitutes an exception to the general rule that the relation of principal

Relevant allegations

In stating cause of action against automobile owner for damage sustained in collision with automobile on theory that driver was owner's agent, allegations as to damage to property and injury to person, as to ownership of automobile, and as to operation of automobile by driver with owner's consent, were relevant in alleging agency.—Parks v. Mathews, 69 P.2d 781, 58 Idaho 3.

Several employers

A petition against several defendants jointly is not invalid for vagueness because of failure to allege which defendant was the employer of the driver, where it alleges that all were employers.—Calamia v. Mayer, La.App., 174 So. 668.

Ratification

In the absence of any direct allegation of ratification, a mere averment that the person so employed was arrested and fined for violating a municipal ordinance with respect to the driving of automobiles in the city, and that the master gave bond for the appearance of such assistant after his arrest, and paid the fine imposed on him, will not suffice to sustain the petition against a general demurrer.—*White v. and agent or master and servant between the owner and operator of the automobile must be alleged.⁹ It is not sufficient to allege that the driver had a reputation for being reckless.¹⁰

Where the driver of the vehicle is the wife of defendant, in order to be sufficient the complaint or petition must state facts which disclose his liability for her acts;¹¹ and a mere allegation that the vehicle belonged to defendant and was operated by his wife is insufficient, where under the statutes a husband is not liable for the torts of his wife not committed by his command or with his consent and in which he in no way participates,¹² or where the family purpose doctrine does not apply so as to obviate the necessity of allegations of agency.¹³ The agency of the wife need not be alleged where there is a statutory presumption that she is her husband's agent,¹⁴ but the fact of the relationship must be alleged.¹⁵

In order to state a cause of action under the family purpose doctrine, it has been held that plaintiff must allege that defendant owned or controlled the automobile and maintained it for the use and benefit of his family,¹⁶ and that the person who operated it at the time of the injury was a minor or a person whom defendant was under a legal or moral obligation to support¹⁷ and that such person was using the automobile pursuant to the family purpose.¹⁸ Where a minor lends the parent's car to another, in order to hold the parent liable under the family purpose doctrine it has been held to be necessary to allege that such other was not on a mission of his own but on a mission of the owner, or that the minor was a passenger in the car.¹⁹ Likewise, a declaration, in an action by the injured person against the owner, which alleges that the automobile was negligently operated by a person not a member of the family "at the direction and under the management, supervision and control" of a member of the family has been held to state a cause of action under the family purpose doctrine.²⁰ The statement of a cause of action based solely on the family purpose doctrine has been held to destroy a general allegation of agency of the driver.²¹

In order to state a cause of action under the civil-law doctrine, or statutes based thereon, that a parent is liable for the acts of a minor residing with him, it is not necessary to allege that the minor was a reckless or incompetent driver or that he was on a mission for his parent.²²

Liability for aiding in procurement of license by minor. Under a statute making a person who signs a minor's application for a driver's license liable for the negligence of the minor, it is necessary to al-

Degree of care

When the facts on which recovery is relied on are alleged, the degree of care which defendant was required to exercise need not be alleged.—Woodward v. Spring Canyon Coal Co., 63 P.2d 267, 90 Utah 578.

30. Ala.—Stewart v. Smith, 78 So. 724, 16 Ala.App. 461.

R.I.—McCoy v. Frutiger, 182 A. 494, 55 R.I. 492.

Complaint held to state no cause of action

In action for injuries to boy falling or thrown from defendant's ice truck driven by codefendant, petition alleging that defendant knew, or by exercise of ordinary care should have known, that plaintiff was on truck stated no cause of action, as defendants owed no duty to exercise ordinary care to discover such fact.—Ice Delivery Co v. Thomas, 160 S.W.2d 605, 290 Ky. 230.

Intoxication of driver

Complaint held sufficient to state cause of action within statute authorizing recovery by guest where injury proximately results from intoxication of driver.—Frisvold v. Leahy, 60 P.2d 151, 15 Cal.App.2d 752.

Licenses

Allegations showing that plaintiff was a mere licensee and charging only simple negligence fail to show any breach of duty.—Reed v. Ridout's Ambulance, Inc., 102 So. 906, 212 Ala. 428.

Use of word "guest" in the complaint does not of itself prevent the complaint from stating a cause of action for breach of the common-law duty to exercise ordinary care.

In an action to recover damages occasioned by the negligent operation of a motor vehicle, the declaration, petition, or complaint must aver negligence,²⁹ or a breach of duty,³⁰ or facts from which negligence may be inferred;³¹ but it is not necessary to aver negligence eo nomine where there are averments of facts showing a breach of duty³² or giving rise to a necessary and irresistible inference of negligence;³³ and where the action is for negligence on the part of the owner of the car, and not for that of an employee, it is unnecessary to allege that there was negligence on the part of the employee.³⁴

It is not enough to allege in general terms that the accident was caused by the negligence of defendant, but the facts constituting the negligence must be alleged.³⁵ The act done or omitted must

Res ipsa loquitur

Allegations held sufficient to raise a presumption of negligence under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.—Loprestie v. Roy Motors, Inc., 185 So. 11, 191 La. 239—Pearce v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., La. App., 3 So.2d 743—Kemper v. Land, La.App., 2 So.2d 248.

Allegations held insufficient

Complaint for injuries to passenger by explosion in arsenal, alleging that defendant negligently drove automobile past arsenal containing explosives, was held demurrable.—Schweitzer v. Mindlin, 162 N.E. 524, 248 N.Y. 560.

Allegation that defendant was negligent would add nothing to sufficiency of the complaint, since, if facts stated disclosed negligence on defendant's part, averment was surplusage, and, if they did not it was useless.—Lasko v. Meier, 67 N.E.2d 162, 394 Ill. 71.

42 C.J. p 1193 note 71.

Inability to state facts

A complaint alleging that plaintiff be stated with sufficient clearness and fullness to inform defendant of the charge he must meet at the trial,³⁶ and, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Pleading § 23, also 42 C.J. p 1193 note 73, it is not permissible to state mere conclusions as to defendant's negligence. However, where facts showing a duty owing by defendant to plaintiff are sufficiently alleged,³⁷ it is sufficient to aver negligence or breach of duty generally.³⁸ In such a case it has been held sufficient to state generally that the act causing the injury,³⁹ such as the running or propelling of a motor vehicle by defendant, or by his agent, servant, or employee as the case may be, on or against plaintiff,⁴⁰ or decedent,⁴¹ or another motor vehicle,⁴² was carelessly and negligently done. Indeed, it is sufficient to allege that defendant or his servant negligently drove a motor vehicle on or against plaintiff,⁴³ or plaintiff's automobile,⁴⁴ or horse and buggy,⁴⁵ or wagon,⁴⁶ or the automobile in which plaintiff was riding;⁴⁷ and additional terms employed to characterize the negligent act may be disregarded as surplusage.⁴⁸

Where defendant's conduct is negligent, it is not necessary to specify whether it was intentional⁴⁹ or that it was habitual.⁵⁰ A general charge of negligence following a specific charge has been held to be merged in the specific,⁵¹ and, if plaintiff undertakes to set out the particular facts on which he relies as constituting negligence, he is bound thereby and if such facts do not constitute a cause of action a general allegation will not make the petition good.⁵² cannot allege the specific act or acts of negligence of defendant which caused the injury fails to state a cause of action on the theory of negligence.—Emigh v. Andrews, 191 P. 2d 901, 164 Kan. 732.

Allegations following federal form

Where the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure have been adopted by a state with but slight change, a complaint containing general allegations of negligence following the federal form 9, Appendix of Forms, form 9, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, is sufficient, even though the federal forms have not been adopted, since such forms are highly persuasive in interpreting the meaning of the rules.—*Kauffroath v. In an action to recover damages occasioned by the negligent operation of a motor vehicle, the petition, complaint, or declaration may,⁶² and sometimes does,⁶³ charge both common-law negligence and negligence consisting of a failure to comply with a statute or ordinance regulating the operation of motor vehicles; and where a petition sufficiently alleges common-law negligence it is immaterial whether it charges a violation of a penal law.⁶⁴ The violation of a statute or ordinance may be charged by an express allegation thereof,⁶⁵ by setting out the facts showing violation,⁶⁶ by alleging notice it will be sufficient.—Blue Bird Coaches, Inc. v. McGregor, 14 Tenn. App. 23.

Averments not prejudicial

In action for death of passenger of automobile which collided with defendant's gasoline truck, allegations of complaint charging that defendant's servant was operating truck while he was in such an intoxicated condition that he was unable to control the truck and to operate it with due regard for the safety of others using the public highway were proper allegations of fact and were not prejudicial to defendant although such operation was a violation of law, where defendant admitted that without those allegations evidence of intoxication of the driver was competent.—Ruddenberg v. Morgan, 38 N.E.2d 287, 110 Ind.App. 609.

Allegation in language of statute not essential, although preferable—Foster v. Flaugh, 271 N.W. 503, 223 Iowa 40.

Conspiracy to violate law

In action for injuries against an automobile dealer and a purchaser of automobile from dealer, wherein it was alleged that defendants conspired to permit a newly-purchased automobile to be operated before title had been transferred to purchaser and without legal licenses, charge of conspiracy was no part of statement of cause of action but was merely a convenient method of charging that defendants were jointly and severally liable for acts of each of them.—Wheat v. Alderson, 130 S.W.2d 650, 234 Mo.App. 346.

Operation by one not defendant's agent

In action by administratrix against automobile dealer for death of guest who, without dealer's consent or knowledge, was riding with prospective purchaser of automobile, where there was no evidence that automobile was being operated by dealer, or its agent, at time of accident, liability of dealer growing out of violation of statute as to brakes was required to be specially pleaded—Foley v. John H. Bates, Inc., 4 N.E.2d 349, 295 Mass. 557.

Violation of rules of commission

In action by occupant of ambulance struck by gasoline truck at intersection, where view was obstructed by transfer truck allegedly improperly parked, the petition was sufficient to invoke rules of public service commission relative to parking and relative to lights.—Reliable Transfer Co. v. May, 29 S.E.2d 187, 70 Ga.App. 613.

that the automobile was being operated unlawfully,⁶⁷ or by making allegations of negligence broad enough to include a violation of a statute or ordinance,⁶⁸ but an allegation that defendant, after crossing a bridge, failed to comply with statutory requirements governing a person approaching a bridge does not set forth a ground of negligence.⁶⁹ The fact that ordinances alleged to have been violated are invalid does not render the petition insufficient where it alleges violations not only of ordinances but also of statutes;⁷⁰ and, even though invalid, the fact that an ordinance was adopted and published may be alleged, since publication may amount to a warning requiring one who sees it to exercise a greater degree of care.⁷¹ Where the violation of the law is not alleged to be the cause of the injury, the petition is demurrable.⁷²

possess a license to operate the vehicle are properly stricken as not being specifications of negligence of the driver or owner,⁷³ but, where a statute prohibits and makes the lending, knowingly, of a vehicle to an unlicensed driver a misdemeanor, plaintiff may allege that the driver was unlicensed and the owner knew it.⁷⁴

Complaint alleging that plaintiff drove his automobile into defendants' truck parked on side of highway at night without statutory lights and that defendants willfully or wantonly permitted the truck to be so parked was a sufficient allegation of simple negligence, even though not good as a wanton or willful count in absence of allegations that defendants were conscious of the danger likely to result in so doing.—Claude Jones & Son v. Lair, 17

So.2d 577, 245 Ala. 441.

Cause of action for punitive damages

(1) Pleading showing joint and concurrent negligence, willfulness,

—Bowers v. Carolina Public Service Co., 145 S.E. 790, 148 S.C. 161.

(2) Petition, alleging that truck driver was grossly and wantonly negligent in driving truck into rear of wagon when the way for clear and free passage around the wagon was open to the truck driver, alleged sufficient acts to authorize recovery of punitive damages if substantiated by the evidence.—American Fidelity & Cas. Co. v. Farmer, Ga.App., 48 S.E.2d 122.

Allegations held sufficient

—Buffalo Rock Co. v. Davis, 154

willfulness or wantonness may be sufficient,⁷⁶ where the pleader goes further and attempts to aver the facts showing wanton or willful injury he must allege facts sufficient to support his conclusion.⁷⁷ In the absence of appropriate and sufficient allegations, a petition or complaint will not be held to charge gross negligence;⁷⁸ but, after judgment, generalizations of defendant's gross negligence will be held sufficient to support it.⁷⁹ Where gross negligence is not recognized as a separate basis for liability, an allegation of gross negligence adds nothing to the allegation of negligence.⁸⁰

Under guest statutes. Where plaintiff was a guest, in order to recover under some guest statutes the petition, declaration, or complaint must allege facts which reveal on their face willfulness or wantonness⁸¹ or gross negligence.⁸² It is not sufficient to characterize mere negligence of defendant by the use of the word "wanton,"⁸³ but failure to allege specifically that the act was wanton does not render the pleading bad where it otherwise sufficiently alleges wantonness.⁸⁴ Gross negligence must be expressly pleaded⁸⁵ unless the allegations are sufficient to demand an inference of gross neg-

Characterization of acts

Allegation that fatal injury was wantonly inflicted by so heedlessly or recklessly operating automobile as to cause a collision was not demurrable on ground that the words "heedlessly or recklessly" were repugnant to "wantonly" and reduced charge to a mere negligence count insufficient under guest statute, since the words "heedlessly or recklessly" do not always mean "negligently," and although, taken alone, they do not contain all elements of wantonness, because they do not necessarily apply knowledge of danger, they denote a status which is an element of wantonness, and without which wantonness could not exist—Brooks v. Liebert, 33 So.2d 321, 250 Ala. 142.

Knowledge of existing conditions

(1) In an action under the automobile guest statute, the guest must plead unequivocally that the motorist had knowledge of existing conditions, otherwise no liability is fixed.—Vecchio v. Vecchio, 1 N.E.2d 624, 131 Ohio St. 59—Haacke v. Lease, Ohio App., 41 N.E.2d 590.

(2) In action for injuries sustained by guest in automobile, petition alleging that operator insecurely fastened door and drove automobile at excessive rate of speed around sharp turn to left, whereby guest was thrown against door, causing it to open, and precipitating guest to ground, was demurrable for failure to allege unequivocally that prior to accident operator had knowledge of fact that door was insecurely fastened—Vecchio v. Vecchio, supra.

Allegation of intent

When motorist's intent to harm guest is alleged, by doing or refraining from doing a specific act constituting willful misconduct, complaint is sufficient against general demurrer.—Frisvold v. Leahy, 60 P.2d 151, 15 Cal.App.2d 752.

ligence.⁸⁶ Where the gravamen of the action is gross negligence, characterization of the act of negligence as willful or wanton may be treated as surplusage.⁸⁷ Under a statute limiting a guest's recovery to intentional injury, a complaint alleging gross negligence will not be sufficient.⁸⁸ Where plaintiff is not a guest, willfulness need not be alleged⁸⁹ and in an action for willful misconduct, negligence need not be alleged.⁹⁰

Where it appears from plaintiff's pleading that a guest relationship probably existed, and where a guest is not entitled to recover for simple negligence, the relationship must be denied or negated in order to state a cause of action based on simple negligence.⁹¹ A mere allegation that the injured person and defendant were engaged in a mutual enterprise is a conclusion and is not sufficient to take the case out of the operation of a guest statute, at least where subordinate facts do not support it.⁹² Allegations as to false representations of defendant as to his marital status have been held immaterial and not to take the case out of a guest statute denying recovery except for gross and wanton negligence.⁹³

Within the foregoing rules various declarations, petitions, and complaints have been held sufficient to permit recovery by a guest,⁹⁴ or insufficient to permit such recovery.⁹⁵

Where recovery is sought in one state for injuries sustained in another state having a guest statute, the pleading must state a cause of action under such statute.⁹⁶ It has been held that the pleading is not defective where it does not contain a recital of the statute and decisions of the state where the injury occurred,⁹⁷ although it has also been held that the pleading is demurrable if it fails to set forth the law of such jurisdiction⁹⁸ or to aver that the facts alleged constituted gross negligence under such law.⁹⁹ If the jurisdiction in which the injury occurred has no guest statute, it is not necessary to allege a cause of action under the guest statute of the state in which suit is brought.¹

In an action to recover damages for injuries caused by the negligent operation of a motor vehicle, the declaration, complaint, or petition must allege that the injuries were the proximate consequence of the negligence or breach of duty alleged.

In an action to recover damages for injuries caused by the negligent operation of a motor vehicle, the declaration, complaint, or petition must allege that the injuries were the proximate consequence of the negligence or breach of duty alleged;² and a complaint merely alleging facts showing that defendant's negligence was a remote cause is insufficient;³ but the exact manner of the injury need not be described.⁴ Two or more specified acts of negligence may be,⁵ and sometimes are,⁶ alleged as the proximate cause of the injury, and a complaint may be sufficient which shows concurrent negligence of several defendants.⁷ A complaint which shows that the proximate cause of the injury was the independent negligence of someone other than defendant is demurrable.⁸

In general, the plaintiff need not negative matters of defense.

Matters of defense to be alleged by defendant need not be negated by plaintiff in his declaration, petition, or complaint.⁹ Since contributory negligence is usually a matter of defense to be pleaded

by defendant, the fact of contributory negligence ordinarily need not be negated by plaintiff in his original pleading,¹⁰ especially where the statute so provides,¹¹ unless the facts stated in such pleading suggest the inference that he may have been guilty of contributory negligence,¹² although, in such case, the complaint is good if it is drawn on the theory of the last clear chance or humanitarian doctrine.¹³ Where plaintiff need not negative contributory negligence, the petition, in an action to recover damages for injury or death caused by a motor vehicle, need not allege that plaintiff or deceased was oblivious of his danger or peril,¹⁴ not only where the case is not based on any last chance or humanitarian doctrine or theory,¹⁵ but also where plaintiff attempts to state a cause of action under the humanitarian rule.¹⁶ On the other hand, in some jurisdictions plaintiff must negative contributory negligence,¹⁷ although it may not be necessary where the complaint alleges willful and wanton conduct causing the injury.¹⁸

20. Ga.—Economy Gas & Appliance Co. v. Kinslow, 39 S.E.2d 899, 74 Ga.App. 418.

Petition held not demurrable

Petition, alleging that plaintiff motorist after seeing defendant's truck approaching on highway three hundred feet to the left, made a left turn onto highway and proceeded at ten miles per hour, forty-six feet along highway before collision, almost head-on, with defendant's truck which had crossed onto left side of

Where plaintiff seeks to rely on the last clear chance doctrine, he must plead it.¹⁹

§ 506. Plea or Answer

The rules of pleading in negligence cases generally, including the rules as to pleading affirmative defenses or contributory negligence, govern pleas or answers in actions for injuries from the operation of motor vehicles.

The rules relating to pleas or answers in civil actions generally, particularly in actions for negligence, govern the plea or answer in an action for injuries caused by a motor vehicle.²¹ The plea or highway, did not establish as a matter of law that plaintiff assumed the risk of being injured in going upon highway and failed to avoid consequences of defendant's negligence.—Economy Gas & Appliance Co. v. Kinslow, supra.

Inconsistent defenses

(1) In action by owner-occupant for injuries sustained while riding in automobile driven by plaintiff's husband in another state, who, plaintiff alleged, was engaged in defendant's business, defendant pleading common-law attribution of operator's negligence to owner-occupant was also entitled to plead guest statute of such other state, since, if plaintiff could establish control in defendant, as by lease or agreement, defendant would be put to necessity of establishing protection under guest statute.—Willis v. Fitzgerald Bros. Brewing Co., 25 N.Y.S.2d 647, 261 App.Div. 357.

(2) In action for injuries sustained by boy when run over by city's truck, defenses alleging that boy was ten years old and that he was contributorily negligent in riding on rear bumper, in violation of ordinance, were not inconsistent or did not impose unwarrantable degree of accountability on ten-year-old boy.—Bown v. City of Tacoma, 27 P.2d 711, 175 Wash. 414.

Last clear chance

In automobile collision case, trial court properly invoked the last clear chance doctrine in favor of defendant where facts warranted application of the principle, even though such doctrine was not invoked by

answer must not be ambiguous,²² or too broad,²³ and irrelevant and redundant matter may properly be stricken.²⁴

Defendant should specially plead matters of justification or excuse,²⁵ including assumption of risk,²⁶ or that defendant was not legally responsible for the conduct of the driver of his vehicle,²⁷ and infancy, if available as a defense.²⁸ Unavoidable accident need not be specially pleaded.²⁹ While it may be proper to plead that some act of a third person was the sole proximate cause of the accident,³⁰ it is not necessary in such case to allege that the third person, not a party to the suit, was negligent in the act pleaded.³¹

Ordinarily, statutes and ordinances relating to speed and rules of the road are not matters of defense to be affirmatively pleaded,³² although, in a proper case, an ordinance may be pleaded as a defense,³³ but an answer relying on an ordinance, but not setting out the ordinance and facts bringing defendant's case within it, is demurrable as pleading a conclusion.³⁴

Contributory negligence. The rules relating to pleas of contributory negligence in actions for negligence in general ordinarily apply to such a plea in actions for injuries caused by negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle.³⁵ In most jurisdictions such negligence is not available as a defense unless it is specially pleaded³⁶ or appears from plaintiff's evidence.³⁷ Also, according to the weight of authority, the facts constituting the contributory negligence must be set out,³⁸ and the facts stated must be such that the conclusion of negligence follows as a matter of law,³⁹ but in some cases general allegations have been held sufficient in the absence of a motion to make the answer more definite and certain.⁴⁰ A plea of contributory negligence on the part of a child of such an age as to be prima facie incapable of contributory negligence is insufficient,⁴¹ unless it alleges facts necessary to fix the responsibility of the infant for his alleged careless or negligent acts.⁴² While allegations that the collision or accident and the consequences thereof were due solely to the negligence of plaintiff and not to any fault or negligence on the part of defendant do not constitute a plea of contributory negligence⁴³ in the sense that a plea of contributory negligence is one of confession and avoidance,⁴⁴ nevertheless such allegations are a sufficient plea to put in issue plaintiff's negligence as the sole cause of the accident from which his injuries arose.⁴⁵ Contributory negligence may be sufficiently pleaded by an allegation in a cross complaint.⁴⁶ A special plea of contributory negligence is no answer to a count alleging wanton injury.⁴⁷

Matters to be proved

(1) In automobile accident case, where petition contained merely a general charge of negligence which was limited to nonobservance of duties relating to operation of defendants' automobile at time of accident, and defendants denied the general charge, plaintiff must establish every provable act of negligence under charges in petition—Clifton v. McMakin, 157 S.W.2d 85, 288 Ky. 806.

(2) Recovery cannot be had under automobile guest statute for death of guest passenger unless it is proved that defendant's misconduct was proximate cause of death.—Denton v. Midwest Dairy Products Corporation, 1 N.E.2d 807, 284 Ill.App. 279.

(3) One seeking to hold owner of automobile, driven by another with owner's consent, for damages on account of negligence, must prove such ownership.—Putnam v. Bussing, 266 N.W. 559, 221 Iowa 871.

(4) Relationship of owner and operator, if duly alleged and denied by special plea, must be proved as required by law.—McDougald v. Couey, 200 So. 391, 145 Fla. 689.

(5) Where action is brought on theory that defendant knowingly permitted habitually reckless driver to operate his automobile, plaintiff must prove that driver was reckless, and that such fact was known or should have been known to defendant.—Vanner v. Dalton, 159 So. 558, 172 Miss. 183.

Ownership of vehicle

In action for damages resulting from collision between automobile and bus, failure to prove ownership of bus was immaterial, where plaintiff relied on fact that driver was employed by bus company who would be answerable for driver's negligent operation within scope of his employment.—Ackerman v. Somerset Bus Co., 174 A. 343, 12 N.J.Misc. 660.

Extent of admissions

(1) In personal injury action against owner and operator of automobile and against insurance company employing him, failure of company, which denied allegation that automobile was under its control at time of accident, to deny further allegation that the employee was an agent in the operation of the automobile on behalf of the company would not preclude the company from contending that, in the operation of his automobile, the employee was not the servant of the company, or that employee was not acting within the scope of his employment.—Dunne v. Contenti, 4 N.Y.S.2d 148, 167 Misc. 925, affirmed 9 N.Y.S.2d 248, 256 App.Div. 833.

(2) Other admissions considered see 42 C.J. p 1199 note 73 [b].

General issue of husband and wife, improperly joined in action arising from wife's operation of automobile, did not admit joint operation of the automobile.—McHale v. McQuigg, 236 Ill App. 295.

Contributory negligence

(1) Where plaintiffs in automobile accident case pleaded defendant's negligence, and defendant pleaded a general denial and contributory negligence, which was denied by plaintiffs, defendant, by pleading contributory negligence, did not admit his own negligence.—Seele v. Purcell, 113 P.2d 320, 45 N.M. 176—42 C.J. p 1199 note 73 [e] (2).

Under general denial

(1) In action for injuries to guest in truck which collided with parked truck on highway, under defendant's general denial of all allegations which alleged that defendant's negligence was proximate cause of injury, defendant could show that injury was caused by anything else which included complete defense that, if guest had not exercised ordinary care to avoid injury, guest could not recover.—Donahoo v. Goldin, 7 S.E.2d 820, 61 Ga.App. 841.

(3) The negligence of plaintiff's husband in driving motor vehicle in which plaintiff was riding, as sole cause of collision and injury, was not an "affirmative defense" and could be shown under general denial.—Easterly v. American Institute of Steel Construction, 162 S.W.2d 825, 349 Mo. 604.

(4) In action of guest in motor vehicle for injuries sustained when motor vehicle collided with defendant's bus which stopped on highway in front of motor vehicle, defendant under its general denial could show any facts tending to establish that it was not guilty of negligence charged.—Rishel v. Kansas City Public Service Co., Mo.App., 129 S.W.2d 851.

(5) Defendant could prove unavoidable accident under general denial.—Schmoker v. French, Tex.Civ. App., 7 S.W.2d 177.

Pleading in short by consent

In action by passenger of motor vehicle against driver for injuries, where agreement to permit defendant to plead, in short, did not show that defendant would rely on defense of assumption of risk and evidence did not show defects in motor vehicle, or that plaintiff had knowledge of defects, such defense was not available to defendant.—Dunklin v. allegation of gross negligence does not preclude plaintiff from proving that he was not a guest.⁷⁴ In jurisdictions where general allegations of negligence are sufficient, any evidence tending to prove a general allegation of negligence is admissible.⁷⁵ On the other hand, the rule obtaining in negligence actions generally that, where specific acts constituting negligence are alleged, evidence of other acts of negligence is not admissible, is applicable in an action to recover damages for injuries occasioned by negligence in operating a motor vehicle;⁷⁶ but the rule is to be reasonably construed.⁷⁷ According to some decisions, where the general averment of negligence is followed by an enumeration and averment of specific acts of negligence, plaintiff's evidence will be confined to the acts of negligence specifically assigned.⁷⁸ Under a petition or complaint alleging negligence generally on the part of defendant, plaintiff may introduce evidence of negligence under the humanitarian rule,⁷⁹ even though he denies that he was guilty of contributory negligence;⁸⁰ but he cannot do so where he has charged only specific acts of negligence.⁸¹

Evidence of lack of proper equipment on defendant's motor vehicle is admissible under a general allegation of negligence in driving a car upon a highway,⁸² as well as under allegations of negligence consisting of careless and reckless driving,⁸³ failure to keep a proper lookout for persons upon the highway,⁸⁴ failure to give notice or warning to persons traveling upon the street that the motor vehicle was standing in the street,⁸⁵ or a violation of an ordinance requiring lights on both the front and rear of the motor vehicle.⁸⁶

Even though lack of chains on defendant's motor vehicle is not specially pleaded, evidence relative thereto may be admitted as tending to show the care required of him in operating the automobile under the existing conditions.⁸⁷

Contributory negligence. Defendant in proving contributory negligence has been held to be entitled to introduce evidence only of such acts or omissions as he has specially pleaded;⁹¹ but it has also been held that, even where there is no plea of contributory negligence, it is competent for defendant to prove, as absolving himself from any imputation of negligence,⁹² that the accident was wholly due to plaintiff's fault and negligence⁹³ or was a mere accident for which no one was to blame.⁹⁴ Evidence to prove contributory negligence has been held admissible under a plea of the general issue,⁹⁵ and such evidence may be admitted under a pleading alleging in general terms that plaintiff's injuries were proximately caused solely by his own negligence.⁹⁶ Plaintiff is entitled to introduce evidence to overcome a defense of contributory negligence;⁹⁷ and it has been held not to be prejudicial error to allow plaintiff, on the question of contributory negligence, to testify to matters concerning which defendant

(b) Evidence of Statute or Ordinance and Violation Thereof or Rights Thereunder

Evidence of negligence, consisting of violation of a statute or ordinance, is admissible under allegations of such a violation or, in a proper case, under a general allegation of negligence.

Negligence on the part of defendant may be proved by evidence of violation of a statute or ordinance⁹⁹ under an allegation of such a violation,¹ or even under a general allegation of negligence.² Also, under the general issue, defendant may introduce evidence of facts showing that he had the right of way under a statute;³ and in some jurisdictions evidence tending to show a violation of certain ordinances by plaintiff's driver is admissible under a general denial as establishing contributory negligence,⁴ or under an answer setting up contributory negligence.⁵ Excuse for failure to comply with a statute has been held admissible under a general denial.⁶ An ordinance is admissible on the issue of negligence⁷ where a violation thereof has been

Ordinance held admissible

Resolution of police jury respecting operation of motor vehicles on bridge was not inadmissible for absence of allegation that it was in force and unrepealed, where allegation was not excepted to.—Lemoine v. Thomas, La.App., 157 So. 170.

Common-law allegation

Where there was no contention made in trial court that streets on pleaded;⁸ but not where it is not relevant⁹ or applicable¹⁰ to the facts of the case. It is not error to exclude evidence of a violation of law where it is not contended that such violation contributed to the accident.¹¹ Where excessive speed is one of the acts of negligence pleaded, proof of violation of a special ordinance is some evidence of excessive speed with respect to the admissibility of the ordinance.¹² A motor vehicle statute of another state is not admissible in evidence when it is not pleaded.¹³ Where plaintiff brings his action under a statute, it has been held that he must confine his proof to statutory negligence.¹⁴

c. Variance

In accordance with the general rules of pleading, there must be no material variance between the pleadings and the proof.

The general rules governing the question of variance between allegations and proof in similar actions are applicable in an action to recover damages caused by the negligent operation of a motor vehicle;¹⁵ but an immaterial variance does not prevent recovery.¹⁶ As in civil actions generally, the pewhich motor vehicles, involved in intersectional collision, were traveling were boulevards or through streets, and plaintiff offered evidence that defendant was traveling thirty-five to forty miles per hour as he went through intersection, ordinance limiting speed through intersection to twenty miles per hour, except in case of through street or boulevard, was admissible as evidence that defendant was operating motor vehicle at negligent rate of speed, in support of common-law allegation of negligence contained in petition.—Hart v. Skeets, 145 S.W.2d 143, 346 Mo. 1118.

Mich.—Van Goosen v. Barlum, 183 N.W. 8, 214 Mich. 595.

Pleading defective in form did not preclude admission of evidence as to violation of ordinance.—Flynn v. Helena Cab & Bus Co., 21 P.2d 1105, 94 Mont. 204.

Existence of ordinance

In intersectional collision case, admission in evidence of traffic ordinance giving right of way to vehicle on right was not error, although certificate attached to ordinance was dated some eleven months before accident, in view of facts that state law was substantially identical with ordinance, and petition relied on state law as well as on ordinance.—Brooks v. Carver, 190 S.E. 389, 66 Ga.App. 362.

Number of ordinance

Where city had one traffic ordinance, an allegation that driver operated motor vehicle in violation of city traffic laws, without giving number of ordinance, was sufficient compliance with rules of pleading to admit ordinance in evidence.—Jones v. American Mut. Liability Ins. Co., La. App., 185 So. 509, annulled on other grounds 189 So. 169.

3. EVIDENCE

§ 509. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

In an action to recover damages for injuries inflicted by a motor vehicle, the burden is on the plaintiff to establish each material fact which constitutes his cause of action.

The general rules relating to presumptions and burden of proof, particularly those which apply in actions for negligence in general, ordinarily govern and control the presumptions and burden of proof in an action for injuries caused by a motor vehicle.²⁰ In accordance with such rules, the burden ordinarily is on plaintiff to establish each material fact which constitutes his alleged cause of action,²¹

Nongovernmental function

In action against city for injuries received when relief worker was thrown from city's truck being used to haul wood for maintenance and operation of city's almshouse and farm, worker had burden to prove that operation and maintenance of institution constituted enterprise partly commercial in character and productive of profit or corporate benefit to city.—Orlando v. City of Brockton, 3 N.E.2d 794, 295 Mass. 205.

Venue

Where owners who resided in Lampasas County were sued in Bastrop County for personal injuries to plaintiff because of defendant owners' negligent operation of truck in Bastrop County, plaintiff as requisite to action in Bastrop County had duty to prove by competent evidence affirmative negligent act in Bastrop such as to show the fact of the accident²² and the details thereof,²³ that it resulted from the particular cause contended for by him where it might have resulted from several causes,²⁴ that defendant or one for whose conduct he is responsible was guilty of negligence or other misconduct, as discussed infra § 511, that such negligence or misconduct was the proximate cause of the injury complained of, discussed infra § 510, that plaintiff suffered some injury or damage,²⁵ the extent of such injuries,²⁶ and the amount of the damages.²⁷

The burden of proof in respect of the material facts which constitute plaintiff's alleged cause of action does not shift,²⁸ although the burden of evidence may, from time to time, shift.²⁹ Thus, where plaintiff makes out a prima facie case, the burden of going forward with the evidence shifts to defendant,³⁰ but no duty rests on defendant to explain his connection with an accident until plaintiff has proved a prima facie case against him.³¹

Affirmative defenses and counterclaims. The burden is on defendant to establish matters of affirmative defense³² and the allegations of his cross complaint.³³

§ 510. — Proximate Cause of Injury

The burden is generally on the plaintiff to show that the negligence or other misconduct of the defendant was the proximate cause of the injury.

The burden of showing that the negligence or other misconduct of defendant was the proximate cause of the injury complained of is generally on plaintiff,³⁴ and ordinarily it will not be presumed that the misconduct of defendant was the cause of County.—Stokes Bros. v. Thornton, Tex.Civ.App., 91 S.W.2d 756.

Service on nonresident

In action for injuries arising out of an automobile accident wherein defendants are served by leaving copies of summons and complaint with director of motor vehicles, on theory that defendants are nonresidents within statute, burden is on plaintiff, when such service is challenged, but plaintiff need not necessarily offer evidence if the facts stated in defendants' affidavits support plaintiff's contention.—Briggs v. Presumption as to damages

Although damages, beyond nominal damages, must be proved and cannot be presumed in action for negligence, proof of actual damages was not essential to maintenance of action for damage caused by automobile collision which defendant admitted was his fault, since proof of actual damage is not an element of a cause of action for negligence.—Edwards v. the injury.³⁵ Where, however, defendant relies on the defense that the negligence of one other than himself was the proximate cause of the accident, it has been held that the burden of proof in that respect is on defendant,³⁶ but it has been held that setting up the negligence of another does not affect the burden of proof as to defendant's negligence being the proximate cause.³⁷ Where there is a presumption of negligence under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur or by reason of the violation of a statute or regulation or a rule of the road, it has been held that the burden is on defendant to establish that his fault was not the cause of the injury,³⁸ but there is also authority for the view that the burden is still on plaintiff to show that the wrong complained of was the proximate cause of the injury.³⁹

§ 511(1). — Negligence or Other Wrong of Defendant in General

In an action for injuries arising from the operation of a motor vehicle, as a general rule negligence will not be presumed but must be proved, although negligence may be inferred from the facts and circumstances of the accident.

In an action for injuries arising from the operation of a motor vehicle, negligence is a fact which, as a general rule, will not be presumed but which must be proved.⁴⁰ Negligence, however, may be established by circumstantial evidence, and the facts and circumstances of a particular accident may be such as to warrant an inference or presumption of negligence,⁴¹ and it will be presumed as bearing on the negligence of the driver of a motor vehicle that he saw whatever he should have seen if properly performing his duties.⁴² A motorist ordinarily is presumed to be operating his vehicle with due care,⁴³ but this presumption is, of course, rebuttable.⁴⁴ Proof of lack of contributory negligence⁴⁵ or the presumption that the injured person was acting with due care⁴⁶ does not warrant a presumption or inference that the person operating the vehicle which inflicted the injury was negligent. It has been held that there is no room for presumptions where the evidence discloses what actually happened.⁴⁷

Willfulness or wantonness may be presumed or inferred from gross negligence or a lack of regard for the safety of others.⁴⁸

§ 511(2). — Burden of Proof as to Negligence or Misconduct

In an action to recover for injuries resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle, the burden is on the plaintiff to prove that the defendant or one for whose conduct he is responsible was guilty of negligence or other misconduct as alleged.

(1) In action for injuries to guests in automobile driven by defendant, plaintiffs' testimony that defendant became angry when requested by plaintiffs to decelerate speed did not justify inference that she acted with knowledge that such speed would probably lead to injuries to plaintiffs and herself under circumstances, the presumption being otherwise.—Katz v. Kuppin, 112 P.2d 681, 44 Cal. App.2d 406.

(2) Defendant's knowledge of probable injuries to plaintiffs cannot be implied from fact of right-hand curve in road, in absence of evidence that he was driving in erratic manner or knew that he was approaching dangerous curve.—Katz v. Kuppin, supra.

Plaintiff has the burden of proving that defendant had a duty to the injured person and that he breached his duty.⁶⁰ Thus, in an action for injury to one in or on a motor vehicle against the operator of the vehicle or one responsible for his conduct, the burden is on plaintiff to establish the status of the injured person⁶¹ as guest,⁶² invitee,⁶³ one invited to ride for the benefit of defendant,⁶⁴ passenger for hire,⁶⁵ or as not a "guest" within a "guest statute,"⁶⁶ and to establish such negligence or misconduct as is necessary to impose liability in view of the injured person's status.⁶⁷

Difficulty of meeting burden

(1) Fact that plaintiff suing for death was faced with great difficulty in proving case did not relieve her from burden of establishing a cause of action.—Church v. Diffany, 11 A. 2d 55, 124 N.J.Law 100.

(2) Courts will not permit motorist whose automobile concededly has injured another to assume attitude that he need not explain, if he can, injury inflicted, merely because no witness was present at instant of collision and victim is dead, but in such circumstances only slight evidence is required to shift to motorist burden of explanation.—Herbert v. W. H. Smith Paper Corporation, 276 N.Y.S. 820, 243 App.Div. 260.

Change in status

In action for personal injuries resulting from automobile accident where it appeared that plaintiff had accepted an invitation to accompany husband and wife on a trip, burden was on plaintiff to show any change in relationship by virtue of subsequent agreement.—Copp v. The burden of proof as to negligence or other misconduct does not shift⁶⁸ even though facts sufficient to raise a presumption of negligence or to establish a prima facie case are shown;⁶⁹ but in such case defendant may explain or rebut the presumption of negligence or other wrong,⁷⁰ and the burden is on him to go forward with the evidence and to rebut or overthrow the presumption⁷¹ and to show that the motor vehicle was operated in compliance with the law and with all proper precautions required by the circumstances.⁷²

Competency of driver. The burden is on the injured person to establish a contention made by him that the operator of the vehicle was incompetent to drive,⁷³ and, where it is sought to hold the owner for permitting the operation of his vehicle by an incompetent driver, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the owner knew or ought to have known of the driver's incompetency⁷⁴ and that the owner's negligence in intrusting the vehicle to an incompetent driver concurred with the driver's negligence to cause the injury.⁷⁵ One under the statutory age for driving a motor vehicle is presumptively incompetent to drive,⁷⁶ but there is no presumption one way or the other as to the skill or want of skill of the driver of a vehicle when all the facts and circumstances out of which a charge of negligence arose are before the jury,⁷⁷ and, where there is evidence to support the charge of negligence, the facts that the driver was reasonably careful and skillful, and exercised that degree of care and skill which an ordinarily careful and skillful driver would have exercised under the circumstances, are matters of proof by defendant.⁷⁸ The presumption that the owner has not authorized the operation of his car by an unlicensed person⁷⁹ disappears from the case when evidence to the contrary is presented.⁸⁰

Permission to use

Fact that father permitted his incompetent unlicensed minor son to drive father's automobile on father's business, thereby committing a misdemeanor, and that son did so on frequent occasions, tended to deprive father of any presumption that he did not willingly violate law in like manner on night of accident when son was using automobile for own pleasure.—Gossett v. Van Egmond, 155 P.2d 304, 176 Or. 134.

Failure to prevent use

Where evidence sustained finding that defendant knew of his minor son's incompetency to drive automobile, it was not necessary for plaintiff to show that defendant's son's use of defendant's automobile was with defendant's permission, but plaintiff was required to show defendant's negligence in failing to take affirmative measures to prevent use of his automobile by his incompetent son.—Gossett v. (a) In general

(b) Operation and effect of doctrine

Where the accident or injury is one which in the ordinary course of events does not occur if the person in charge of the motor vehicle uses proper care, proof of the happening of the accident warrants a presumption or inference of negligence under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, discussed generally in the C.J.S. title Negligence § 220, also 45 C.J. p 1193 note 51 et seq, where the accident or injury is one which in the ordinary course of events does not occur if the person in charge of the motor vehicle uses proper care, proof of the happening of the accident in the absence of evidence to the contrary warrants an inference or presumption of negligence or establishes a prima facie case of negligence or is presumptive evidence of negligence on the part of such driver or operator.⁹¹ On the other hand, the doctrine does not apply unless the accident or injury is one that does not normally occur without negligence on the part of the operator of Common experiences of ordinarily prudent men under the same or similar circumstances are the proper measuring rod by which it can be determined whether an inference of negligence is permissible under the rule of res ipsa loquitur.—Minkovits v. Fine, 19 S.E.2d 561, 67 Ga.App. 176.

Notice of defect

(1) Where the injury results from a defect in the vehicle, but liability may not be imposed on defendant in the absence of actual or constructive notice, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable unless notice is shown.—Bodholdt v. Garrett, 10 P.2d 533, 122 Cal.App. 566.

(2) Where the injury results from a defect in the vehicle and reasonably frequent inspections were made and the defect was not one which could have been discovered by a reasonable inspection, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply.—Smith v. Fisher, 11 Tenn.App. 273.

In Michigan the doctrine is not followed.—School Dist. of City of Ionia, for Use and Benefit of Employers' Liability Assur. Corporation v. Dadd, 18 N.W.2d 268, 308 Mich. 220.

the motor vehicle, and ordinarily the mere happening of an accident or injury does not make the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applicable.⁹² The accident or injury must be established before the doctrine may be invoked.⁹³ In determining the applicability of the doctrine, the control of the instrument which inflicted the injury is a significant factor,⁹⁴ and, as a general rule, the doctrine is inapplicable unless the instrumentalities involved are exclusively in defendant's control;⁹⁵ but the doctrine has been applied in the case of a collision between moving vehicles.⁹⁶

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply

where there is no want of evidence as to the cause of the accident and the manner in which it occurred,⁹⁷ where plaintiff apparently knows as much about the accident and its cause as defendant,⁹⁸ where the evidence establishes the cause of the accident,⁹⁹ where the proof leaves room for a different presumption or inference,¹ or where it is shown that the accident might have happened as the result of one of several causes, for some of which defendant is not responsible.² The mere fact that the accident is unexplained does not warrant the application of the doctrine where the negligence of the operator or owner is not a probable explanation.³

It has been held that plaintiff may not rely on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur where he has pleaded specific negligence⁴ or sought to prove it,⁵ but it has also been held that the doctrine is not rendered inapplicable by an unsuccessful attempt to prove specific acts of negligence.⁶

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur may apply in an action against the owners or operators of different vehicles as joint tort-feasors,⁷ and it has been held that, where a collision occurs under such circumstances that an inference or presumption arises that one or both of the drivers were negligent, it is the duty of both to exonerate themselves.⁸ The doctrine may also apply in an action by a passenger, guest, or other occupant of a motor vehicle against its operator or owner.⁹

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur has been held not to be available to establish a presumption or inference of recklessness,¹⁰ gross negligence,¹¹ will-

Carriers without reward

(2) Evidence that driver had exclusive control of automobile when guest fell from seat when door opened suddenly without any apparent reason, and that driver, although having no duty to keep automobile in repair, had knowledge of defective door latch, rendered doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applicable in guest's action against driver for injuries.—Adams v. Le Bow, 172 S.W.2d 874, 237 Mo.App. 1191—Adams v. Le Bow, 160 S.W.2d 826, 236 Mo.App. 899.

ful misconduct,¹² or gross negligence or willful and wanton misconduct.¹³

(b) Operation and Effect of Doctrine

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, where applicable, operates to shift the burden of going forward with the evidence to the defendant, but it does not shift the burden of proof.

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, where applicable, operates to shift the burden of going forward with the evidence to defendant¹⁴ and relieves plaintiff from showing any particular act of negligence,¹⁵ but it does not operate to shift the burden of proof,¹⁶ nor does it transform the general issue into an affirmative defense.¹⁷ It places on defendant the burden of explaining that the accident did not occur from want of care on his part,¹⁸ but, if defendant shows that he exercised due care under the circumstances, he does not have the burden of giving a satisfactory explanation of the accident.¹⁹ The presumption of negligence arising from the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not conclusive but may be rebutted,²⁰ as by proof of freedom from negligence²¹ or by proof as to the cause of the accident.²²

c. Application of Rules

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur ordinarily is held to apply, and a presumption of negligence arises, where without apparent reason a motor vehicle overturns or leaves the highway, where a motor vehicle strikes a clearly visible stationary object or person, or where injury is caused by the movement of an unattended vehicle; but not where a motor vehicle skids or a tire blows out.

The particular facts and circumstances of a variety of motor vehicle accidents have been held to be²³ or not to be²⁴ such as to bring into operation the rule of res ipsa loquitur or to raise a presumption of negligence.

Blowout. It has been held that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply, and that an inference or presumption of negligence may not be made, where injury results from the blowout of a tire,²⁵ but that plaintiff must establish that the tire was defective and that the defect was known or could have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable care.²⁶

Falling asleep. Proof that the operator of a motor vehicle fell asleep warrants an inference or presumption of negligence,²⁷ but not of gross negligence.²⁸ This presumption of negligence is not conclusive, but may be rebutted,²⁹ as by proof that the operator, as a careful and cautious person, could not have foreseen that he was about to fall asleep.³⁰

Injury caused by something projecting from, attached to, or falling from, vehicle. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur has been applied where the injury was caused by something projecting from,³¹ attached to,³² or falling off,³³ a motor vehicle.

Left turn. It has been held that a collision involving a vehicle making a left turn at an intersection is presumed to have been caused by the negligence of the driver of that vehicle.³⁴

Rear-end collision. The circumstances under which a rear-end collision occurs may warrant the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and the indulgence of a presumption or inference of negligence.³⁵ It has been held, however, that the

Fact that motorist's car was struck on left side authorized no inference that oncoming car was negligently on wrong side of road.—Clark v. Bolton, 246 N.W. 326, 210 Wis. 631.

Cause of damage

Petition alleging that defendant through his employees was in sole control of operation of truck, that wheat fire started at point on land over which truck passed, immediately after truck had passed, and that no other persons or vehicles were near, was insufficient to allege a cause of action based on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, since petition raised only a presumption that truck caused damage.—Emigh v. Andrews, 191 P.2d 901, 164 Kan. 732.

Hot water

Where plaintiff was injured by hot water from automobile driven by owner's wife, res ipsa loquitur doctrine was held inapplicable.—Randazzo v. Wheaton, 180 N.E. 303, 278 Mass. 536.

Previous directions

In action for injuries sustained by subcontractor, when another subcontractor's truck crane backed into him without warning as he sat on a wall from which position he had directed crane operator in all previous movements of crane, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur had no application.

happening of a rear-end collision does not of itself warrant an inference or presumption of negligence,³⁶ but other authorities hold, sometimes by reason of statute, that in such case it is presumed that the rear vehicle was at fault³⁷ or that a rear-end collision furnishes at least some evidence of negligence on the part of the operator of the rear vehicle.³⁸

Skidding. As a general rule, the mere fact that a motor vehicle skids and inflicts an injury does not

§ 511(4). — Violation of Statutes, Regulations, or Rules of Road

A violation of a rule of the road, or of a statute or regulation governing the operation of motor vehicles, warrants a presumption or inference of negligence.

A violation of a rule of the road, or of a statute or regulation governing the operation of motor vehicles, warrants a presumption or inference of negligence.⁴⁹ Such presumption does not shift the burden of proof as to negligence,⁵⁰ but requires defendant to come forward with evidence justifying or excusing his violation or establishing that he was acting with due care.⁵¹ The burden is on plaintiff to establish the statute, regulation, or rule of the road,⁵² and defendant's violation thereof.⁵³ The presumption is rebuttable,⁵⁴ and where the presumption is rebutted the burden of going forward with the evidence is again on plaintiff.⁵⁵ The statutory presumption of negligence on the part of one shown to have violated the motor vehicle law has been held to disappear from the case when all of the facts and circumstances are in evidence,⁵⁶ but it has also been held that the presumption of negligence arising from a violation remains as evidence in the case even though rebuttal evidence is presented,⁵⁷ except where the rebutting evidence is conclusive.⁵⁸

Control and speed. A presumption or inference of negligence may be drawn from the fact that a motor vehicle was out of control,⁵⁹ and the burden

Loss of, or failure to regain, control

Where the driver of a truck failed to notice a deep rut or depression on each side of the tongue of a street railroad switch and one of the front wheels entered the rut, wrenching the steering gear out of his hands or otherwise causing him to lose control of the truck, which ran wild for about a hundred feet and stopped on the sidewalk, it was held that these circumstances might well raise an inference of negligence either by reason of insufficient control before the rut was encountered or in failing to regain control promptly after it was encountered.—Geise v. Mercer Bottling Co., 94 A. 24, 87 N.J.Law 224.

The term "control" as used in statute providing that a speed in excess of twenty-five miles an hour through a thickly settled portion of a town is on defendant to come forward with evidence that the loss of control was not due to fault on his part.⁶⁰ A failure to stop quickly and easily has been held to permit a presumption or inference that the vehicle was traveling too fast or that a proper effort to control it was not made.⁶¹

Where plaintiff's case is based on the violation by defendant of a statute or other regulation as to speed, he must prove such violation,⁶² although an inference of excessive speed may arise from the facts proved.⁶³ The violation of a regulation as to speed may constitute prima facie evidence of negligence⁶⁴ or raise a presumption of negligence.⁶⁵ This presumption or inference may be rebutted, and where the buildings average less than one hundred feet apart is deemed prima facie evidence of unreasonable speed by motorist, means not alone the ability to guide the automobile, but comprehends the ability to stop automobile easily and quickly, with the speed being the critical element in determining whether automobile is under control.—Hill v. Depends on circumstances

Under statutes, whether speed of automobile is prima facie evidence of negligence depends on surrounding circumstances.—Willi v. Schaefer Hitchcock Co., 25 P.2d 167, 53 Idaho 367.

Speed regulation as rule of evidence

Evidence, but not prima facie evidence, of negligence

Mass.—Gibbons v. Denoncourt, 9 N.E. 2d 633, 297 Mass. 448.

Burden on plaintiff

(1) Under statute the burden is on plaintiff to show that the speed violation was negligence.—Whelan v. Bigelow, 92 P.2d 952, 33 Cal.App.2d 717.—Gaston v. Hisashi Tsuruda, 43 P.2d 355, 5 Cal.App.2d 639.—Meads v. Deener, 17 P.2d 198, 128 Cal.App. 328.

(2) Statute placing burden of proving motorist's negligence on adversary, even though definite speed limit specified in same section has been exceeded, was held valid.—Potapoff v. Mattes, 19 P.2d 1016, 130 Cal. App. 421.

(3) Statute was rule of evidence on trial, commenced after effective date of act, in action for death of motorist in accident occurring before such date.—Lossman v. City of Stockton, 44 P.2d 397, 6 Cal.App.2d 324.

(4) Statute, however, was held inapplicable to a pending action.—Morris v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 43 P. 2d 276, 2 Cal.2d 764.

No speed limit

In action by guest for injuries sustained during automobile trip through another state which had no speed limit in miles per hour, it was not necessary that guest introduce evidence that seventy miles per hour, which was speed at time of accident, was in excess of speed at which prudent drivers in other state were accustomed to drive.—Du Bois v. Owen, 60 P.2d 1019, 16 Cal.App.2d 552.

Where speed violation has no causal relation to injury, the presumption does not arise.—Newton v. Wetherby's Adm'r, 153 S.W.2d 947, 287 Ky. 400.

is only prima facie evidence of negligence,⁶⁶ and does not shift the burden of proof as to negligence,⁶⁷ but the burden is on defendant to overcome such presumption by showing that the speed in excess of the statutory limit was, under the circumstances, reasonable,⁶⁸ and, where there is no proof to overcome the presumption, it becomes conclusive.⁶⁹

Driving on wrong side. The operation of a motor vehicle on the wrong side of the road ordinarily gives rise to a presumption or inference of negligence⁷⁰ in case of a collision with another vehicle⁷¹ or, although as to this there is also contrary authority,⁷² with a pedestrian,⁷³ provided such wrong is shown to have a causal connection with the injury.⁷⁴ The burden is on plaintiff to prove an assertion that defendant was on the wrong side of the road,⁷⁵ and in the absence of such proof the presumption does not apply.⁷⁶ The presumption is not conclusive, but only prima facie evidence of negligence, and may be rebutted;⁷⁷ as by showing that the conditions existing at the time and place of the collision justified the driver's being where he was at the time,⁷⁸ but it imposes on defendant the burden of going forward with the evidence and excusing or justifying his violation.⁷⁹ When the presumption is rebutted, the burden of going forward with the evidence is again on plaintiff.⁸⁰ It has been held that the presumption goes out of the case when rebuttal evidence is presented, but that the proof on which the presumption was based remains.⁸¹

Equipment. Although there is authority to the contrary,⁸² it has been held that defendant's motor vehicle will be presumed to have been equipped with proper lights and brakes.⁸³ A failure to have proper brakes warrants a presumption or inference of negligence,⁸⁴ and places the burden on defendant to justify or excuse his violation⁸⁵ and to show that he made as adequate an inspection of them as a reasonable man would recognize as necessary.⁸⁶

motor vehicle in violation of a statute has been held to be prima facie evidence of negligence.⁹⁰

Lookout and lights. The failure to have and operate sufficient lights to maintain a proper lookout warrants a presumption or inference of negligence,⁹¹ but the presumption may be rebutted,⁹² as by a showing that the violation did not proximately cause the injury.⁹³ Where required by law, it is presumed that defendant was operating his lights.⁹⁴

Overtaking and passing another vehicle. It has been held by reason of a statute that, where a collision occurs between motor vehicles while one of them is overtaking and passing another, there is a presumption that the operator of the overtaking vehicle was negligent,⁹⁵ but this presumption applies only where the attempt to pass is made when there is not sufficient distance ahead to permit the passing to be made with safety.⁹⁶ Where a vehicle moves to the left instead of the right to permit another vehicle to overtake and pass him and a collision results, negligence on the part of the overtaken vehicle may be presumed.⁹⁷ Where the overtaking vehicle fails to give the statutory warning before passing, negligence is presumed.⁹⁸ Where a statute forbids overtaking and passing another vehicle at an intersection, a violation of the statute raises a presumption of negligence,⁹⁹ but the burden is on plaintiff to prove the violation.¹

Parking on highway. Ordinarily the parking of a motor vehicle on the highway does not warrant a presumption or inference of negligence,² but under particular circumstances or by reason of statute such conduct may be in violation of law and may warrant a presumption or inference of negligence,³ placing the burden on defendant to show justification or excuse,⁴ or that the case is within an exception provided for by the statute,⁵ but in order to invoke the presumption plaintiff must prove the parking and that it was a violation.⁶

Right of way. A violation of the right of way at an intersection may raise a rebuttable⁷ presumption or inference of negligence⁸ and place the burden of explaining the accident on the violator.⁹ There is authority for the view that, where a pedestrian under an ordinance has the right of way at a street intersection, defendant has the burden of proving that he used reasonable care to avoid inflicting an injury on a pedestrian at a street intersection.¹⁰

Signals. Under a statute requiring a horn or other signal device to be sounded when reasonably necessary, the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show not only that it was necessary to sound the horn or other device,¹¹ but also that it was not sounded.¹² A failure to give or sound a signal or warning of the approach of a motor vehicle when the circumstances are such as to require it has been considered as prima facie evidence of negligence.¹³

Turns. A failure to comply with the statutes or rules of the road in making a turn may warrant a presumption or inference of negligence.¹⁸

Violation of traffic signal or sign. Warning lights. The burden is on plaintiff to prove an assertion that defendant failed to display warning lights at a time when required,²⁴ but such fact, when established, warrants an inference or presumption of negligence²⁵ which may be rebutted,²⁶ but it casts on defendant the burden of excusing or justifying his violation and showing that he was free from fault.²⁷ It has been held, where a statute requires the placing of warning lights or flares when a motor vehicle is parked on the highway under certain circumstances, that proof of such parking places the burden on defendant to show compliance with the statute,²⁸ and that plaintiff makes out his case by showing a violation of such statute,²⁹ and that the burden is on defendant to show justification for the violation.³⁰ The burden has been held to be on plaintiff to prove facts establishing the duty to post warnings or flares.³¹

b. Ownership

(a) In general

(b) Ownership as raising presumption of liability

The burden is on plaintiff to establish defendant's ownership of the motor vehicle which inflicted the injury where such fact is material to a recovery.³⁵

Exact correspondence of name and designation on vehicle

(1) In order to raise presumption of ownership of automobile, it is not necessary that there should be an exact correspondence between designation on vehicle and actual name of alleged owner.—M. dora v. Alfieri, 17 A.2d 873, 341 Pa. 27—Reed v. Horn's Motor Express, 187 A. 275, 123 Pa.Super. 411—Vance v. Freedom Oil Works Co., 173 A. 496, 113 Pa. Super. 280.

(2) The words "Farmers Dairy" on truck involved in accident did not create presumption that "Farmers Dairy Association" of another state owned the truck, since quoted words seem to be a generic term designating a type of establishment rather than name of a particular concern, especially where legend on truck indicated that truck was owned and operated by an individual not connected with the association.—Mildora v. Alfieri, supra.

warranting an inference of ownership.³⁸ His ownership may also be presumed from the fact that he holds the license,³⁹ that the tag number on the car corresponds to the number of a car registered in his name,⁴⁰ that it bears license plates issued to, or owned by, him,⁴¹ or that it is registered in his name,⁴² even though he is a dealer in motor vehicles.⁴³

This presumption of ownership of the motor vehicle is not conclusive⁴⁴ and may be rebutted,⁴⁵ but

Corporate or individual ownership

The rule that fact that name of defendant was painted or inscribed in some manner on motor vehicle raises a presumption or is prima facie evidence that defendant owned such vehicle applies to any business, regardless of whether it is incorporated, is a partnership, or is one owned by one or more individuals.—J. A. & E. D. Transport Co. v. Rusin, Tex. Civ.App., 202 S.W.2d 693, set aside on other grounds 206 S.W.2d 95.

Two names

Where vehicle had the names of corporate defendant and of an individual on it, there was a presumption of ownership and agency as to both.—Young v. Wilky Carrier Corporation, D.C. Pa., 54 F.Supp. 912, affirmed, C.C.A., 150 F.2d 764, certiorari denied 66 S.Ct. 470, 326 U.S. 786, 90 L.Ed. 477.

Name on contents of vehicle, but not on vehicle, is not sufficient to raise presumption of ownership of vehicle.—Henry v. Beck, 36 A.2d 734, 154 Pa.Super. 585—Henry v. Beck, Pa.Com.Pl., 56 York Leg.Rec. 209

Absence of other testimony

Testimony merely showing that truck had defendant's name painted on its side followed by words "Ice Cream" did not make out a prima facie case of ownership sufficient to force defendant to go forward with his evidence, especially where there was no testimony that defendant was in ice cream business or used a truck similarly lettered.—Dufresne v. Cooper, 11 A.2d 3, 64 R.I. 120.

Sale of vehicle

Under a statutory provision that on the sale of a motor vehicle the delivery thereof shall not be deemed to have been made until the seller has removed his license number plates, where the vendor has failed to remove his plates for the year in which he sold the car, it will be conclusively presumed, as far as the rights of the public are concerned, that he was the owner and operator of the car, at least for such year.—*Peters v. it establishes a prima facie case of ownership⁴⁶ and puts the burden on defendant to come forward with evidence denying ownership.⁴⁷ It has been held that the presumption of ownership is not evidence,⁴⁸ but merely an administrative assumption or rule of procedure⁴⁹ which drops out of the case when the facts are established by evidence.⁵⁰

Continuance of ownership. Where it is shown that a vehicle once belonged to defendant, a presumption arises that the ownership continues.⁵¹ While this presumption may be rebutted,⁵² ownership is presumed to continue until a change is affirmatively shown by defendant.⁵³

(b) Ownership as Raising Presumption of Liability

As a general rule, ownership of the motor vehicle

which inflicted the injury may warrant a presumption that the owner is liable therefor, that the owner had possession and control of the vehicle, and that its operator was his agent or servant acting within the scope of his employment and on the owner's business and with the authority or consent of the owner.

In a number of jurisdictions, sometimes by reason of statute, it has been held that ownership of a motor vehicle may warrant a presumption that the owner is responsible for the manner in which it is driven and is liable for its negligent or wrongful use.⁵⁴ Proof of defendant's ownership has also been regarded as sufficient to raise the presumption that at the time of the injury the vehicle was in the possession, or under the control, of defendant, either in his own person or in that of one, such as his agent or employee, for whose conduct he is responsible.⁵⁵ Likewise, particularly where a statute

Failure to report sale

Presumption of continuing ownership by not notifying county clerk of automobile's sale was held not applicable, where car had been recently brought into state for sale, and had never been previously used or registered in state—Leonard v. Finney, 43 S.W.2d 213, 162 Tenn. 318.

Purchase after accident

Where defendant in automobile collision case claimed to have purchased truck involved subsequent to accident, it must be presumed, in absence of contrary proof, that statute relating to transfer of second-hand motor vehicles was strictly complied with and that bill of sale for truck was in defendant's possession.—Harper v. Highway Motor Freight Lines, Tex.Civ.App., 89 S.W.2d 448, error dismissed.

Wis.—Hanson v. Engebretson, 294 N.W. 817, 237 Wis. 126.

The reason for the rule that proof of ownership of an automobile driven by another makes a prima facie case of owner's liability for injuries caused in its operation is that whether automobile was being operated in prosecution of owner's business is matter peculiarly within owner's knowledge, so that when the reason for the rule fails, the rule does not apply.—Hanson v. Engebretson, supra.

Reason for rule

The presumption has been adopted by the courts as a reasonable rule because of inconvenience, difficulty, and in many cases impossibility of otherwise proving by affirmative evidence that driver of vehicle was acting under control and direction of owner—Kavanaugh v. Wheeling, 7 S.E.2d 125, 175 Va. 105.

When automobile is found unattended, in apparent violation of traffic regulations, it is presumed to have been so left by owner, or servant acting within authority.—Newell Contracting Co. v. Berry, 134 So. 870, 223 Ala. 109.

Ownership in third person

Pedestrian, having conceded that defendant did not own truck causing injuries, had burden of rebutting presumption that owner was in control, and of establishing that owner had surrendered control to defendant as hirer of truck and driver, mere division of control between owner and defendant being insufficient.—*Richter v. In Connecticut

(1) Statute providing that, in action to recover damages for negligent operation of defendant's automobile by another, operator shall be presumed to be defendant's agent and that defendant shall have burden of rebutting such presumption, is not unconstitutional as arbitrary or unreasonable.—Koops v. Gregg, 32 A.2d 653, 130 Conn. 185.

(2) Prior to the statute, it was held that there was no presumption that the operator of a motor vehicle was the owner's agent or servant.—Smith v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 177 A. 524, 119 Conn. 483—Midtown Trust Co. v. Bregman, 174 A. 67, 118 Conn. 651—Matulis v. Gans, 141 A. 870, 107 Conn. 562.

ployment,⁵⁷ and, at least in the case of commercial vehicles,⁵⁸ on the owner's business or for his purposes.⁵⁹ It has also been presumed, sometimes by reason of statute, that one who operates a vehicle does so with the authority or consent of the owner.⁶⁰

On the other hand, ownership of a motor vehicle has been held to raise no presumption of liability;⁶¹ proof of ownership has been held to afford no presumption that the vehicle was in the control of the owner or his agent, or engaged in the owner's business, at the time of the accident;⁶² proof of ownership has been held to be insufficient to raise a presumption that the operator of the vehicle was the agent or servant of the owner;⁶³ and the mere fact of a driver's possession of a vehicle has been Presumption of consent arising from use of vehicle by agent or servant see infra § 511 (6) b.

Vehicle in army convoy

The presumption is that driver of motor vehicle in a long army convoy was driving with authority, which was not rebutted by mere showing of lack of express authority and of ambiguous printed regulations, in view of the failure of government to disclose the rest of the relevant facts, and government was liable for negligent injury of another by such driver—Cox v. U. S., Ct.Cl., 73 F.Supp. 1022.

Use by another

With respect to presumption, arising under statute from proof of ownership, that automobile was being driven with permission of owner at time of accident, fact that automobile was being driven by some one other than person to whom owner had directly entrusted it was not controlling—Aarons v. In California

(1) Under statute imposing on automobile owner liability for the negligent operation of vehicle with the permission, express or implied, of owner, a permissive use may not be inferred from a showing of ownership alone so as to impose liability on owner—Engstrom v. Auburn Automobile Sales Corporation, 77 P.2d 1059, 11 Cal.2d 64.

(2) Presumptions under statute that person is innocent of crime and that law has been obeyed were held insufficient to sustain burden of proof on injured person to establish that automobile injuring him was operated with owner's express or implied permission.—Bradford v. Sargent, 27 P.2d 93, 135 Cal.App. 324.

(3) There is, however, a presumption that one operating the automobile of another has necessary consent to make his act lawful.—Lanfried v. Bosworth, 114 P.2d 406, 45 Cal.App.2d 408—Hoffmann v. Lane, 54 P.2d 477, 11 Cal.App.2d 655—Phillips v. Cuccio, 42 P.2d 1050, 5 Cal.App.2d 520—Pozzobon v. O'Donnell, 36 P.2d 236, 1 Cal.App.2d 151.

(4) Accordingly, in absence of evidence of relationship between driver and owner of automobile, presumption that driver was innocent of crime or wrong has been held to warrant finding that driver operated automobile with owner's consent so as to make owner liable for damages occasioned by negligence of driver.—Lanfried v. Bosworth, supra—Prickett v. Whapples, 52 P.2d 972, 10 Cal. App.2d 701.

Vehicle owned by another

A finding of agency arising out of fact that name of carrier from which recovery for damages was sought appeared on trailer truck depended on inference that truck was owned by carrier, but concession of ownership in another removed any evidential value from fact that carrier's name thus appeared.—Venuto v. that one presumption may not be based on another.⁶⁹

These presumptions of liability, control, agency, and consent based on proof of defendant's ownership of the motor vehicle which inflicted the injury

have been held to make a prima facie case as to the owner's liability and responsibility⁷⁰ and to be sufficient to support a verdict against the owner.⁷¹ Ordinarily such presumptions are only prima facie,⁷² are not conclusive,⁷³ and may be rebutted.⁷⁴

Conclusive presumption

Under a statutory provision that on the sale of a motor vehicle the delivery thereof shall not be deemed to have been made until the vendor has removed his license number plates, where the vendor has failed to remove his plates for the year when he sold the car it will be conclusively presumed, as far as the rights of the public are concerned, that the person who is operating the car is the agent of the vendor.—Peters v. Inert vehicle

Where an inert automobile or trailer is being towed by an automotive vehicle, a license tag on the inert vehicle merely announces its registration as a piece of freight, and raises no presumption that driver of towing vehicle is servant of owner of inert vehicle.—Fuller v. Strength of presumption

The strength of rule that plaintiff makes prima facie case by showing that defendant owned automobile injuring plaintiff necessarily depends on circumstances and evidence in particular case, and rule disappears when surrounding circumstances are such that its recognition is unreasonable.—Arthurs v. While the presumptions from the fact of ownership do not shift the burden of proof,⁷⁵ they put the burden on defendant to come forward with evidence that he is not liable or responsible for the operation of his motor vehicle.⁷⁶ It has been held that these presumptions are presumptions of law⁷⁷ or administrative presumptions or rules of procedure,⁷⁸ but it has also been held that they are presumptions of fact.⁷⁹ In any event, although there are some statements apparently to the contrary,⁸⁰ it has been held that these presumptions are not evidence,⁸¹ and go out of the case on proof of the facts,⁸² whether such evidence is presented by plaintiff or defendant.⁸³ Likewise, such presumptions are inapplicable where plaintiff prevents proof of the facts.⁸⁴ Where the presumptions are sufficiently rebutted, the burden of going forward with the evidence is again on plaintiff.⁸⁵

(c) Registration as Raising Presumption of Liability

Under some statutes the registration of the motor vehicle which inflicted the injury in the defendant's name as owner is prima facie evidence of, or raises a presumption that, he is liable and responsible for its operation.

Filing facts does not waive right to rely on presumption.—Leitzes v. F. L. Caulkins Auto Co., 196 A. 145 123 Conn. 459.

Attempt to prove consent does not preclude reliance on presumption.—Aarons v. Standard Varnish Works, 296 N.Y.S. 312, 163 Misc. 84, affirmed 3 N.Y.S.2d 910, 254 App.Div. 560.

84. Wis.—Hanson v. Engebretson, 294 N.W. 817, 237 Wis. 126.

Objection to evidence

Where plaintiff prevented the proof of the facts by objecting to the introduction of such evidence, the rule that proof of ownership of an automobile driven by another makes a prima facie case of owner's liability for injuries caused in its operation was inapplicable.—Hanson v. Engebretson, supra.

Purpose of statute

(1) The object of the statute is to protect an innocent victim against financial loss following an accident in case the automobile is operated by a person other than the owner.—Hill v. Cabral, 2 A.2d 482, 62 R.I. 11, 121 A.L.R. 1072.

(2) Such statutes manifest intent to do away with the difficulty encountered by injured persons in trying to make formal proof that driver was operating in owner's behalf at time of accident.—Legarry v. Finn Motor Sales, 23 N.E.2d 1011, 304 Mass. 446.

Statute held valid

Mass.—Thomes v. Meyer Store, 168 N.E. 178, 268 Mass. 587.

Retroactive operation

In action for injuries by automobile, statute making registration in defendant's name prima facie evidence of operation under his responsibility was held applicable, even though enacted after cause arose.

Mass.—Greenburg v. Gorvine, 181 N.E. 128, 279 Mass. 339—Wilson v. Grace, 173 N.E. 524, 273 Mass. 146—Haun v. Le Grand, 168 N.E. 180, 268 Mass. 582—Thomes v. Meyer Store, 168 N.E. 178, 268 Mass. 587—Smith v. Freedman, 167 N.E. 335, 268 Mass. 38.

Lease transferring exclusive control to lessee

Ruling of bureau of motor carriers of Interstate Commerce Commission that a carrier hiring motor vehicle should do so by lease providing for transfer to lessee of exclusive control over vehicle and operator did not supersede statute making registration of motor vehicle in name of owner prima facie evidence that vehicle is being operated under control of a person for whose conduct registered owner is legally responsible.—Garfield v. Smith, 59 N.E.2d 287, 317 Mass. 674, certiorari denied 65 S.Ct. 1568, 325 U.S. 879, 89 L.Ed. 1995, and D. W. Lines v. Ward, 65 S.Ct. 1569, 325 U.S. 879, 89 L.Ed. 1995.

Owner as plaintiff

The statute is inapplicable to an action in which the owner is plaintiff.—Thompson v. Sides, 176 N.E. 623, 275 Mass. 568.

Consequential damages

Statutory presumption that registered owner of automobile was responsible for driver's conduct was held inapplicable to action for consequential damages.—Karpowicz v. Manasas, 176 N.E. 497, 275 Mass. 413

Under some statutes proof of the registration of the motor vehicle in defendant's name as owner is prima facie evidence of, or creates a presumption that, the registrant was liable or responsible for the operation of the vehicle,⁸⁶ or that the person operating the vehicle was doing so as servant or agent of the registrant within the scope of his employment,⁸⁷ and with the owner's consent and authority.⁸⁸ In order to invoke the presumption, registration must be proved,⁸⁹ and it has been held that the presumption may not be based on ownership,⁹⁰

Failure to comply with statute

Defendant's failure to have license number transferred when it bought automobile involved in accident as required by statute did not entitle plaintiffs to presumption of agency to which they would have been entitled, under statute, from proof of registration of automobile in defendant's name, in absence of showing at least where the motor vehicle is registered in another's name,⁹¹ but it has also been held that the presumption may be invoked where registration is presumed from proof of ownership.⁹² Such statutes are procedural⁹³ and do not change the substantive law.⁹⁴ The presumption raised by the statute is rebuttable⁹⁵ and does not preclude defendant from showing that he is not liable or responsible for the operation of the vehicle,⁹⁶ but it has been held that in the absence of rebuttal the verdict or finding must be in accordance with the presumption.⁹⁷ Under some statutes the presumption does not shift the burden of proof,⁹⁸ but merely puts on defendant the burden of going forward with the evidence,⁹⁹ and disappears from the case when the facts are proved;¹ but other statutes have been held to create more than a mere presumption² and to make the owner's lack of responsibility and liability an affirmative defense³ as to which defendant has the burden of proof.⁴

c. Possession and Control

The burden is on the plaintiff to establish the defendant's possession and control of the vehicle which inflicted the injury, and the facts of possession and control may warrant a presumption of the defendant's liability and responsibility for the operation of the vehicle.

The burden is on plaintiff to establish defendant's possession and control of the motor vehicle, where such fact is material to a recovery.⁵

Defendant may be presumed to be responsible and liable for the operation of the motor vehicle by another where he had possession and control of the vehicle,⁶ and, according to the decisions on the causal connection between failure to comply with statute and injury.—English v. George Cole Motor Co., 111 S.W.2d 386, 21 Tenn.App. 408.

Prior law

(1) Under a prior statute the operator of the vehicle was presumed to be the servant or agent of the owner acting within the scope of his employment.—Emert v. Wilkerson, 7 Tenn.App. 269—Racy Cream Company v. Walden, 1 Tenn.App. 653.

(2) At common law there was no presumption that the owner was liable for the operation of the vehicle or that its driver was the owner's servant or agent.—Davis v. Newsome Auto Tire, etc., Co., 213 S.W. 914, 141 Tenn. 527.

Purely for consideration of court

The statutory presumption that automobile, registered in name of defendant in action for injuries caused thereby, was being operated by his servant in course and scope of employment, operates primarily on trial judge's power and cannot properly be considered by jury.—Southern Motors v. Morton, 154 S.W.2d 801, 25 Tenn.App. 204.

Rebuttal by discredited witnesses

The fact that evidence rebutting statutory presumption comes from impeached or discredited witnesses does not leave such presumption in case, but merely prevents destruction of presumption and permits it to operate in sense that trial judge, by reason thereof, cannot take question from jury, which must pass on credibility of such witnesses without considering or being influenced by presumption.—Southern Motors v. Morton, supra.

Presumptions

(1) It must be presumed that persons riding in automobile as driver's invited guests at time of collision between it and truck had no right to control automobile or manner of its operation.—Russo v. Aucoin, La.App., 7 So.2d 744.

(2) Where owner of newspaper route orally agreed to deliver bundles of newspapers to carriers in his territory for a specified weekly sum, and nothing was said as to the manner in which the route owner should perform his work, it could not be presumed that right of control was retained by publisher.—Bass v. Kansas City Journal Post Co., 148 S.W.2d 548, 347 Mo. 681.

Presumption of control. Defendant's control of the motor vehicle which inflicted the injury may be presumed where he was its owner, as discussed supra subdivision b of this section, where he was operating the vehicle,⁸ where he was its owner and was present in the vehicle at the time of the accident,⁹ or where the driver was the one regularly employed by the owner to drive.¹⁰ Such presumptions as to control may be rebutted,¹¹ but the burden of coming forward with such evidence is on defendant.¹²

§ 511(6). — Acts of Persons Other than Defendant

- a. In general
- b. Presumption of consent, permission, or authority to use vehicle
- c. Presumption of agency
- d. Presumption of operation within scope of employment and on defendant's business

- e. Authority of operator to invite persons to ride
- f. Acts of members of family

a. In General

Where the plaintiff seeks to charge the defendant with liability for the negligence or misconduct of another in the operation of a motor vehicle, the burden is on the plaintiff to prove that the operator was the servant or agent of the defendant acting within the scope of his employment on the defendant's business or that for some other reason the defendant is responsible for his conduct.

Where plaintiff seeks to charge defendant with liability for the negligence or misconduct of another person who was operating a motor vehicle, the burden is on plaintiff to establish all the facts which are necessary to fix defendant with such liability.¹³ Thus, plaintiff has the burden of proving that defendant is responsible for the acts of the driver or operator,¹⁴ as, for example, that the defendant authorized, permitted, or consented to the use of the motor vehicle by its operator at the time the injury was inflicted,¹⁵ that the operation of the vehicle was pursuant to a partnership or joint enterprise on the

Use beyond scope of consent

In action against corporate owner of automobile for injuries sustained while owner's manager was driving automobile, burden of proving the cause of action remained at all times on plaintiffs, but, when it was shown that owner gave automobile to manager to use, presumption arose that manager had right to use automobile and duty shifted to owner of showing that manager's actual use was part of defendant and the operator of the vehicle,¹⁶ or that the driver or operator was a servant or agent of defendant,¹⁷ acting within the scope of his employment or agency,¹⁸ and that the vehicle not permitted.—Barber v. Jewel Tea Co., 800 N.Y.S. 302, 252 App.Div. 362, affirmed 16 N.E.2d 94, 278 N.Y. 540.

Equally reasonable

Where, under given state of facts, theory of agency is as reasonable as that of independent contractor, party asserting relationship of independent contractor has burden to show real relationship of parties—Mitchell v. Maytag-Pacific-Intermountain Co., 51 P.2d 893, 184 Wash. 342.

Express authority

Evidence in action for injuries to automobile passenger that driver was performing service expressly authorized by defendant corporation created presumption that he was defendant's employee, not independent contractor, and cast burden on defendant to show otherwise.—Commercial Credit Co. v. Groseclose, Tex. Civ.App., 66 S.W.2d 709, error dismissed.

Contract sham

Surrender of control

One delivering automobile to another to drive it to distant point and deliver it to designated person cannot be presumed to have surrendered control thereof so as to render driver independent contractor.—Commercial Credit Co. v. Groseclose, Tex. Civ.App., 66 S.W.2d 709, error dismissed.

was being used on his business,²⁴ it has been presumed that such operation was with defendant's consent or permission. Likewise, an inference that the vehicle was being used with defendant's consent may be established by other facts reasonably warranting such inference.²⁵ This presumption of authority, permission, or consent does not shift the burden of proof,²⁶ and may be rebutted,²⁷ but where it is not rebutted it is sufficient to support a verdict or finding.²⁸

Presumption of consent to use of vehicle arising from fact of ownership see supra § 511 (5) b.

Use for other than defendant's purposes

(1) Court cannot presume that driver was authorized to use truck for purposes unconnected with employers' business.—Monnet v. Ullman, 276 P. 244, 129 Or. 44.

(2) Open and public use of employer's automobile by employee for personal purposes without any objection by employer, however, has been held to permit inference that employer consented thereto.—Schultz v. Swift & Co., 299 N.W. 7, 210 Minn. 533.

Prior use

(1) Consent could be implied from past conduct.—Bridges v. Welzien, 300 N.W. 659, 231 Iowa 6.

(2) In order to establish such an inference, plaintiff must prove defendant's knowledge of the past conduct.—McGowin v. Howard, 21 So 2d 683, 246 Ala. 553.

(3) A statute governing driving without owner's consent, and providing that consent shall not be presumed or implied because of previous consent, should be construed as a whole as defining a misdemeanor, and as not applicable in civil action for damages suffered in automobile collision.—Abbs v. Redmond, 132 P. 2d 1044, 64 Idaho 369.

(4) The mere fact that a vehicle is kept where an employee has access to it will not authorize the presumption that he was accustomed to take or use the vehicle with the consent or knowledge of the owner, or had ever done so.—Stewart v. Lafoe, 240 S.W. 57, 194 Ky. 655.

(5) If an employee, with knowledge and assent of employer, repeatedly uses an automobile, not owned by employer, in employer's business, employer will be held to have impliedly authorized its use, and to be liable for negligence in connection therewith, but mere fact that automobile was used on one occasion, unaccompanied by any evidence of other similar acts, does not justify any inference that employee was later authorized to use automobile on employer's business.

c. Presumption of Agency

The operator of a motor vehicle may be presumed to be the owner's agent or servant where the owner authorized or consented to its use or it is being used on the owner's business.

The operator or driver of the motor vehicle may be presumed to be the agent or servant of defendant where defendant was present in the vehicle at the time of the accident,²⁹ or authorized, permitted, or consented to its use,³⁰ or where it was being used on his business or for his purposes,³¹ or where any other facts and circumstances reasonably warranting an inference of agency are established,³²

hicle arising from fact of ownership see supra § 511 (5) b.

Prospective purchaser

The presence in an automobile of an automobile dealer while the automobile was driven by a prospective buyer of the automobile at the dealer's invitation created a rebuttable presumption that the prospective buyer was the dealer's agent.—Dahnke v. Meggitt, 26 N.E.2d 223, 63 Ohio App. 252.

Employee of another

Where the only evidence showed that automobile was being driven by automobile dealer's employee at time it struck plaintiff's decedent, it could not be inferred that driver was an employee of finance company which became owner of the automobile on its repossession by dealer on behalf of finance company.—Stewart v. Norsigian, 149 P.2d 46, 64 Cal.App.2d 540, rehearing denied 15 P.2d 554, 64 Cal.App.2d 540.

Additional facts required

In addition to permissive use of automobile, either employment of operator by automobile owner or that operator was member of family group of owner or was operating automobile under control of or for a member of family group of owner must be established in order to justify inference of agency.—Stewart v. Norsigian, 150 P.2d 554, 64 Cal. App.2d 540.

but it has also been held that the fact that the driver was in charge of the vehicle with the owner's consent raises no presumption that the driver was the owner's agent.³³ While technically the burden of proof does not shift,³⁴ where a presumption or inference has arisen that the driver of the vehicle at the time of the accident was the servant or agent of defendant, he has the burden of going forward with evidence showing that the driver was not his agent.³⁵

As a general rule, operation within the scope of employment and on the defendant's business may be presumed where a motor vehicle owned or controlled by the defendant is being operated by his servant or agent.

While there is some authority to the contrary,³⁶ ordinarily the facts that at the time of the accident the vehicle was owned by defendant and that it was driven by his agent or servant raise a presumption that such employee was acting within the scope of his employment,³⁷ and that he was operating the

Bailment

The inference of automobile driver's agency for another, as affecting liability for negligent driving, may be drawn from proof of such other's bailment of automobile, as well as from proof of the other's ownership, and control and custody, rather than title, is material.—Runnell v. Parelius, 87 P.2d 230, 160 Or. 673.

Prior conduct

Where automobile involved in collision is shown to belong to defendant and driver to be person accustomed to drive automobile on defendant's business, defendant is required to meet inference that at time of accident driver was acting as defendant's agent.—Hawthorne v. Eckerson Co., C.C.A. Vt., 77 F.2d 844.

Where automobile owned by corporation and driven by its president collided with another automobile causing injuries to an occupant and at time of accident corporation's president was returning to work for another corporation after completing a purely personal mission, fact that corporation to which president was returning to work had practically same officers and shareholders as corporation which owned automobile did not give rise to an inference that president was acting as agent of owner corporation at time of accident so as to impose liability on it for automobile occupant's injuries.—*Hillman v. Facts permit, but do not require, inference of operation within scope of employment.—Montgomery v. Hutchins, C.C.A.Cal., 118 F.2d 661.

Comparison with presumption arising from mere ownership

The presumption, arising from showing that driver of automobile causing injury was employee of owner, that he was acting within scope of his employment at time of accident is stronger than that arising from mere proof of ownership of automobile.—Chandler v. Owens, 179 So. 256, 235 Ala. 356—Toranto v. Hattaway, 122 So. 816, 219 Ala. 520.

Presumptive ownership

The presumption has been held to apply even though ownership is proved by a presumption.—Empire Gas & Fuel Co. v. Muegge, 143 S.W.2d 763, 135 Tex. 520.

Presumption that a truck owned by corporation and involved in a collision and operated by an agent was being operated in the line and scope of agent's authority is extended to the further presumption that truck owned by corporation, dissolved within five years prior to the collision, was being operated for some purpose not in violation of the statute which continues the existence of corporation for five years which was dissolved for any cause, except by judicial decree.—Southeastern Const. so.⁴² The presumption that the person employed to drive is acting within the scope of his employment or authority is indulged where the circumstances surrounding the use of the vehicle are those under which it is usually used,⁴³ and this condition as to usual use is stated as a qualification of the rule by some authorities.⁴⁴ In some jurisdictions this presumption is applicable only in the case of a business vehicle,⁴⁵ and does not apply as to a pleasure car.⁴⁶

Operation within the scope of employment and on defendant's business may also be presumed where defendant is the owner and is present in the vehicle at the time of the accident⁴⁷ or from any other facts and circumstances reasonably warranting such inference.⁴⁸ Where an injury is caused by an automobile bearing a dealer's license tag, the presumption arises that it was being used for the purpose for which the license was issued.⁴⁹ A commercial vehicle owned or controlled by defendant traveling its usual route has been presumed to be engaged in defendant's business.⁵⁰ The mere fact that the vehicle which inflicted the injury was being operated by an employee of defendant does not raise a presumption that he was acting within the scope of his employment or on defendant's business where it is not shown that defendant owned or controlled the vehicle.⁵¹

These presumptions establish a prima facie case as to operation within the scope of employment and on defendant's business⁵² and are sufficient to support a verdict or finding to that effect,⁵³ but the presumptions may be rebutted.⁵⁴ While in a technical sense the burden of proving that the vehicle was operated in the business of defendant or that the driver was acting within the scope of his employment does not shift from plaintiff,⁵⁵ where a presumption has arisen that at the time of the accident a vehicle was being operated in the business of defendant, or that the servant or agent was acting within the scope of his employment, defendant has the burden of overthrowing such presumption.⁵⁶ It has been held that these presumptions are presumptions of law⁵⁷ or administrative presumptions,⁵⁸ but it has also been held that they are presumptions of fact.⁵⁹ It has been held that these presumptions are not evidence⁶⁰ and go out of the case on proof of the facts,⁶¹ whether such evidence is presented by plaintiff or defendant,⁶² but, although the presumptions may go out of the case, the facts on which they are based remain.⁶³ Where the presumptions are sufficiently rebutted, the burden of going forward with the evidence is again on plaintiff.⁶⁴

e. Authority of Operator to Invite Persons to Ride

The burden is on the plaintiff to prove the operator's authority to invite persons to ride in the vehicle, and such authority may not be presumed from the fact that the operator is the defendant's agent or is authorized to operate the vehicle.

Where it is sought to charge defendant with liability for the negligence or misconduct of the operator of a motor vehicle toward an occupant of the car, the burden is on plaintiff to establish the operator's authority to invite the occupant to ride.⁶⁵ Such authority may not be presumed from the fact that the operator was defendant's servant or agent,⁶⁶ that defendant authorized the driver to operate the vehicle,⁶⁷ or that the vehicle was registered in defendant's name, even though a statute makes such registration prima facie evidence of defendant's liability or proof that the operator is his agent.⁶⁸

Where the plaintiff seeks to charge the defendant with liability for the negligence or misconduct of a member of his family in the operation of a motor vehicle, the burden is on the plaintiff to establish facts necessary to impose such liability.

Where plaintiff seeks to charge defendant with liability for the negligence or misconduct of a member of his family in the operation of a motor vehicle, the burden is on plaintiff to establish facts necessary to impose such liability on defendant,⁶⁹ as, for example, that such member was operating the car as an agent or servant of defendant,⁷⁰ or as part of a joint enterprise with him,⁷¹ or that such operation was with the authority, permission, or consent of defendant,⁷² or under his control,⁷³ or on his business.⁷⁴

It has been held that proof that the vehicle was owned by defendant and was operated at the time of the accident by some member of defendant's family raises a presumption that such member was defendant's agent or servant⁷⁵ and was operating the vehicle for defendant,⁷⁶ with defendant's consent,⁷⁷ and within the scope of the authority conferred.⁷⁸ The presumption has been held to apply

only in the case of a family purpose car,⁷⁹ but under some statutes proof that the vehicle is owned by a specified member of the driver's family raises a presumption that the car is a family car and was being operated with the owner's general authority.⁸⁰ On the other hand, it has also been held that no presumption arises that the member of the family who was operating the car was the agent or servant of defendant,⁸¹ or that such member was acting for defendant,⁸² even though such operation was with defendant's consent.⁸³

Where defendant rides with his wife or minor child, who is driving, according to some cases, he is presumed to exercise some control over the driver.⁸⁴ If at the time he was using the vehicle the husband of defendant was conveying home household supplies, a presumption arises that he, as head of the family, was acting for himself.⁸⁵ The operation of a community car by the wife warrants a presumption that her use was for the community.⁸⁶

A presumption that a member of the family was operating the vehicle as the agent of defendant,⁸⁷ with the consent of defendant,⁸⁸ or within the scope of the authority conferred⁸⁹ is rebuttable. While such presumptions or inferences do not change the ordinary rules as to burden of proof,⁹⁰ defendant has the burden of meeting the presumption that the operator was his agent,⁹¹ that the operator was acting with defendant's consent,⁹² or that such operator was acting for defendant.⁹³ A presumption that the husband, as head of the family, was acting for himself, is rebuttable.⁹⁴

Indorsement of license. It may be presumed that a parent indorsed a son's application for a license as required by statute, where he is the proper person to have done so.⁹⁵

- a. In general
- b. Contributory negligence as affirmative defense
- c. Freedom from contributory negligence as part of plaintiff's case

a. In General

Various presumptions, such as that contributory negligence is not ordinarily to be presumed from the mere happening of the accident, and that the injured person is presumed to have seen what he should have seen, have been indulged on the issue of contributory negligence in actions for injuries inflicted by motor vehicles.

In actions for injuries inflicted by motor vehicles, appropriate presumptions have been indulged on the issue of contributory negligence.⁹⁶ As a

Visibility

With respect to contributory negligence of pedestrian who was struck by automobile while crossing busy street on a rainy evening, pedestrian would be presumed to have known that, in the rain, condition of visibility was such that pedestrian might not readily be seen by one

general rule, the mere happening of the accident does not make out a case of contributory negligence on the part of the injured person.⁹⁷ The injured person will be presumed to have seen what, in the exercise of due care, he should have seen.⁹⁸

Violation of regulation or rule of road. Where defendant claims that the injured person violated a statute, regulation, or rule of the road, in those jurisdictions where, as discussed infra subdivision b of this section, contributory negligence is regarded as an affirmative defense, he has the burden of proving the applicability of the regulation or rule,⁹⁹

that the injured person violated it,¹ and that, although as to this there is also authority to the contrary,² such violation was the proximate cause of the injury;³ but it has also been held that the burden is on plaintiff to show that he complied with such statutes and rules.⁴

The violation of such a statute, regulation, or rule of the road has been held to raise a presumption of contributory negligence⁵ casting on plaintiff the burden of coming forward with evidence to rebut the presumption.⁶ According to some cases there is no presumption of negligence from the fail-operating an automobile.—L'Heureux v. Desmarais, 197 A. 327, 89 N.H. 237.

Jay walking

(1) The fact that pedestrian was in street attempting to cross busy street near middle of block and not at crosswalk when struck by backing automobile has been held to be prima facie evidence of negligence to be considered with other facts and circumstances in evidence.—Hart v. City of Chicago, 42 N.E.2d 887, 315 Ill.App. 214.

(2) Although a pedestrian may have the right of way at street crossings only, the fact that he is injured between street crossings, however, has also been held not of itself to constitute prima facie evidence of contributory negligence.—Crunkilton v. Hook, 42 A.2d 517, 186 Md. 1.

Right of way at intersection

Fact that motor vehicle at street intersection approached from right of vehicle injured was held not of itself sufficient to raise presumption of contributory negligence.—Taxicab Co. v. Ottenritter, 135 A. 587, 161 Md. 626.

Riding with person who is driving automobile at unlawful speed is not of itself prima facie evidence of contributory negligence of guest.—Waltrovich v. Black, 254 Ill.App. 49.

ure of a pedestrian to look before crossing a street;⁷ nor is there a conclusive presumption of negligence if a pedestrian did not continuously look or listen while crossing.⁸ Where both plaintiff and defendant were equally guilty of a violation of law, the presumption, if any, is that the accident was the result of the combined fault.⁹

Infants. The rule as to the burden of proof on the issue of contributory negligence, as discussed infra subdivisions b and c of this section, is generally the same where the injured person is an infant as where he is an adult, and in those jurisdictions in which contributory negligence is regarded as an affirmative defense, the burden is on defendant to prove that the injured infant was contributorily negligent,¹⁰ and the injured infant is presumed to have used due care;¹¹ but, in other jurisdictions in an action by an infant, plaintiff must prove his freedom from contributory negligence.¹² In accordance with the rules discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence § 218, also 45 C.J. p 1186 note 69 et seq, a child under a specified age, usually fourteen, is presumed to be incapable of negligence¹³ and defendant has the burden of going forward with evidence to rebut the presumption,¹⁴ but an infant above such age is presumed to possess sufficient understanding and capacity to be chargeable with contributory negligence.¹⁵ The presence of a child on a street has been held not, of itself, to raise a presumption of negligence against the parents,¹⁶ but, where there is no evidence on which the court can determine whether the infant was sui juris, it has been held that plaintiff does not make out a case where there is no proof of the exercise of any care either by the parents or by the infant.¹⁷

Last clear chance doctrine. Where plaintiff seeks recovery despite his negligence under the last clear chance or humanitarian rule, he has the burden of proving the facts entitling him to recover under such rule.¹⁸

b. Contributory Negligence as Affirmative Defense

In most jurisdictions the burden is on the defendant to establish contributory negligence, and the injured person is presumed to have acted with due care.

Violation of act providing for punishment of any one who should drive over highway which had been closed by proper authority was material only if unlawful act of traversing closed highway was proximate cause of the collision.—Miller v. Guthrie, 191 A. 61, 325 Pa. 495.

§ 515. — To Prove Due Care, Negligence, or Contributory Negligence Generally

Any competent evidence having a logical and material tendency to prove negligence or the lack thereof on the part of the defendant or the driver of his vehicle, or to prove contributory negligence or the lack thereof on the part of the plaintiff or decedent, at the time and place in question is admissible; but ordinarily evidence of a motor vehicle driver's negligence on other occasions, or of his habitual or customary manner of driving or operating the vehicle, is inadmissible.

In an action to recover damages for death or injuries occasioned by the operation of a motor vehicle, any competent evidence having a logical and material tendency to prove negligence or the lack thereof on the part of defendant or the operator of his vehicle,⁵⁷ or to prove contributory negligence or the lack thereof on the part of plaintiff or decedent,⁵⁸ at the time and place in question is admissible. Reasons for rule

The reputation of a driver and his conduct at other times and places are not safe or reliable criteria by which to determine what his conduct was at a particular time and place. Most automobile drivers operate their vehicles many thousands of miles without accident and in the presence of the ever-present hazard of other traffic; but, nevertheless, there are many thousands of serious accidents, and this situation justifies the conclusion that most motor vehicle accidents chargeable to man-failure are due to lapses from the customary skill and care of the drivers involved. A very poor or careless driver may be wholly free from fault in the particular instance involved, and, likewise, the most skillful driver, accustomed to exercising the utmost care, may be grossly negligent on one particular occasion—Holberg v. McDonald, supra.

Testimony as to whether decedent was generally fast driver

Tex.—Orchin v. Fort Worth Poultry & Egg Co., Civ App., 43 S.W.2d 308, reformed on other grounds 53 S.W.2d 103.

Where driver had fully described his actual operation of automobile, his testimony that his knowledge of dangerous traffic conditions usually present at scene of accident would make him more cautious, and testimony of driver's witnesses that driver was careful driver, was inadmissible.—Linde v. involvement or lack of involvement in other accidents or collisions,⁶² his habitual carelessness,⁶³ negligence,⁶⁴ or caution,⁶⁵ or his customary manner of driving, operating,⁶⁶ or parking⁶⁷ the vehicle is ordinarily not admissible.

This is also true of evidence respecting an injured or deceased pedestrian's habits while on or approaching a highway or intersection;⁶⁸ but sometimes such evidence is held admissible,⁶⁹ or at least its admission is held not prejudicial,⁷⁰ as where it is elicited on cross-examination and prior testimony of the witness on the same subject matter has been brought out without objection,⁷¹ or there is an issue or contention in the case to which the evidence is relevant,⁷² or the eyewitnesses had no time to view the situation clearly and opposite inferences may reasonably be drawn from their testimony.⁷³ In a death action, evidence of decedent's careful⁷⁴ habits as a driver, pedestrian, or bicyclist, as the case may be, is admissible, in some jurisdictions, as bearing on his due care, where there is no eyewitness to the accident,⁷⁵ except defendant who is incompetent to testify;⁷⁶ but in at least one other jurisdiction evidence of the habits of decedent is not admissible notwithstanding the absence of eyewitnesses to the accident.⁷⁷

(1) Where defendant motorist was called by plaintiff as an eyewitness, testimony as to careful habits of deceased was inadmissible.—Scally v. Plannery, 11 N.E.2d 123, 292 Ill.App. 349.

(2) In a subsequent case, however, where, after the admission of evidence of the careful habits of decedent, an objection that defendant was an incompetent witness was overruled and he testified in his own behalf as to how the accident occurred, it was held that evidence of the careful habits of decedent, being proper when it was admitted, remained so, no motion to strike it having been made and the trial judge, in his written opinion overruling a motion for a new trial, having stated that he was still in doubt as to whether there was an eyewitness to the accident.—Walters v. Ind., 48 N.E.2d 791, 319 Ill.App. 162.

77. Ohio.—Ashdown v. Tresise, 160 N.E. 502, 26 Ohio App. 575, affirmed

Other accidents at same place. Evidence of other accidents or near accidents on other occasions at the same crossing or place,⁷⁸ or in the same vicinity,⁷⁹ may and should be excluded, at least where there are numerous eyewitnesses to the accident in question⁸⁰ or it is not shown that the conditions at the time of another accident or near accident, are similar to those existing at the time of the accident in question.⁸¹

Violation of a traffic law, either state or municipal, may be shown as evidence of negligence;⁸² but, on the question whether the violation of a statute or ordinance constitutes actionable negligence, it is immaterial whether the driver could anticipate or foresee injury⁸³ and no inquiry in respect thereof will be permitted.⁸⁴ A motorist may offer proof excusing his failure to observe a statutory requirement notwithstanding his violation of the requirement is considered negligence per se.⁸⁵

Failure of driver to sound horn. Evidence of the failure of the driver to sound the horn on his motor vehicle may be admissible;⁸⁶ but it is otherwise in respect of a failure to sound the horn while rounding a curve, where the curve did not obstruct the driver's view.⁸⁷ All the circumstances influencing the driver's conduct may be considered in determining whether his failure to sound the horn of his vehicle was negligence.⁸⁸

Status or relation of parties as affecting evidence of negligence. Evidence of one defendant that another defendant or his driver had the last clear chance to avoid the accident is inadmissible;⁸⁹ where plaintiff, as a passenger in an automobile, is not chargeable with the negligence of the driver, such negligence is material in an action against the driver of another automobile only if the driver of the latter automobile was without contributing fault;⁹⁰ and, in an action to recover for the wrongful death of a person riding on defendant's truck, proof of ordinary negligence is immaterial unless there is further evidence that the relation of deceased to defendant rose higher than that of a bare licensee, volunteer, or trespasser.⁹¹

Evidence of acts or conduct of a person involved in a motor vehicle accident or collision prior to the accident or collision may be admissible,⁹² as where the acts or conduct took place immediately prior to the accident or collision,⁹³ or there is other evidence showing that the conduct continued to the time of the accident or collision,⁹⁴ or the evidence is not so palpably remote as to render its reception an abuse of discretion.⁹⁵ On the other hand, evidence of conduct before the accident or collision may be inadmissible,⁹⁶ as in the case of evidence of conduct a considerable time before,⁹⁷ or a considerable distance from the place of,⁹⁸ the accident

Evidence of acts or conduct after the accident or collision may be admissible, as in the case of acts or conduct immediately after the accident or collision,⁹⁹ or where the evidence is offered for a purpose other than that of proving negligence.¹ However, its subject matter may be such that evidence of acts or conduct after the accident or collision is inadmissible.² Evidence held admissible includes: Evidence that defendant's truck went "out of sight" after the accident;³ evidence that a motorist, after leaving his automobile and looking at a bicyclist whom his vehicle had struck, ran back to his automobile and started the motor;⁴ evidence that de-defendant refused to assist plaintiff in going to a hospital for treatment and induced others to refuse assistance;⁵ and evidence of a violation of a "stop and render assistance" statute.⁶ On the other hand, it has been held that evidence that after plaintiff was struck the chauffeur started to run away, was followed, caught, and brought back by one of the witnesses for plaintiff is not admissible as evidence of negligence.⁷ At any rate, where defendant remained at the scene of the accident, evidence that subsequently a police officer made unsuccessful efforts to find him is inadmissible;⁸ where the removal of plaintiff's automobile has been accounted for, evidence concerning a police official's efforts to locate it is immaterial;⁹ and evidence that, some time after the persons involved had left the scene of the accident, one of them did not visit another who was injured,¹⁰ or did not inquire about the injury or offer any assistance,¹¹ should not be admitted.

Where there is evidence that defendant's physical condition has not materially changed, the manner in which he operated his automobile within a reasonable time before and after the accident may be shown to rebut the inference that at the time of the accident he was unfit to stop, regulate, or control an automobile because of alleged disabilities,¹² but not for the purpose of showing that he was operating the automobile carefully at the time of the accident.¹³ It has been held that evidence that other drivers on the same day did not see the sunken place in the road into which defendant drove his vehicle is not admissible;¹⁴ but it has also been held that evidence that during the same night other automobiles collided, or nearly collided, with the parked unlighted truck involved is admissible as

corroborative of testimony that the truck was not clearly discernible to travelers.¹⁵

b. Age, Experience, Intelligence, or Physical Condition

(1) In general

(2) Intoxication or use of intoxicants

(1) In General

Evidence of the physical condition of a person involved in the accident or collision and of such facts as that he was asleep or fatigued, or had defective vision or only one arm or leg, may be admissible. Where a minor is involved, his age and intelligence, and, if he was a driver, his experience or lack thereof in driving, may be considered.

It is proper to show plaintiff's or intestate's physical condition as bearing on the question of contributory negligence¹⁶ or on defendant's claim that plaintiff fell while attempting to climb up on a trailer.¹⁷ An operator's application for a license, in which he failed to disclose any physical incapacity or infirmity, is incompetent against him.¹⁸

Sleep or fatigue. Competent evidence that the operator of a motor vehicle involved in the accident or collision was asleep at the time is admissible,¹⁹ as is also evidence of preceding events showing his condition as to fatigue and alertness of mind.²⁰

Vision. The condition of the eyes of a driver of a motor vehicle may be considered in determining whether his vehicle was on the wrong side of the highway.²¹ Also, evidence that the driver wore no glasses and that an expired operator's license required him to wear adequate glasses is admissible.²² However, where, in an action for a negligent collision, plaintiff admits that his eyes were bad, testimony as to the details or nature of the eye

fendant refused to assist plaintiff in going to a hospital for treatment and induced others to refuse assistance;⁵ and evidence of a violation of a "stop and render assistance" statute.⁶ On the other hand, it has been held that evidence that after plaintiff was struck the chauffeur started to run away, was followed, caught, and brought back by one of the witnesses for plaintiff is not admissible as evidence of negligence.⁷ At any rate, where defendant remained at the scene of the accident, evidence that subsequently a police officer made unsuccessful efforts to find him is inadmissible;⁸ where the removal of plaintiff's automobile has been accounted for, evidence concerning a police official's efforts to locate it is immaterial;⁹ and evidence that, some time after the persons involved had left the scene of the accident, one of them did not visit another who was injured,¹⁰ or did not inquire about the injury or offer any assistance,¹¹ should not be admitted.

Where there is evidence that defendant's physical condition has not materially changed, the manner in which he operated his automobile within a reasonable time before and after the accident may be shown to rebut the inference that at the time of the accident he was unfit to stop, regulate, or control an automobile because of alleged disabilities,¹² but not for the purpose of showing that he was operating the automobile carefully at the time of the accident.¹³ It has been held that evidence that other drivers on the same day did not see the sunken place in the road into which defendant drove his vehicle is not admissible;¹⁴ but it has also been held that evidence that during the same night other automobiles collided, or nearly collided, with the parked unlighted truck involved is admissible as

b. Age, Experience, Intelligence, or Physical Condition

- (1) In general
- (2) Intoxication or use of intoxicants

(1) In General

Evidence of the physical condition of a person involved in the accident or collision and of such facts as that he was asleep or fatigued, or had defective vision or only one arm or leg, may be admissible. Where a minor is involved, his age and intelligence, and, if he was a driver, his experience or lack thereof in driving, may be considered.

It is proper to show plaintiff's or intestate's physical condition as bearing on the question of contributory negligence¹⁶ or on defendant's claim that plaintiff fell while attempting to climb up on a trailer.¹⁷ An operator's application for a license, in which he failed to disclose any physical incapacity or infirmity, is incompetent against him.¹⁸

Sleep or fatigue. Competent evidence that the operator of a motor vehicle involved in the accident or collision was asleep at the time is admissible,¹⁹ as is also evidence of preceding events showing his condition as to fatigue and alertness of mind.²⁰

Vision. The condition of the eyes of a driver of a motor vehicle may be considered in determining whether his vehicle was on the wrong side of the highway.²¹ Also, evidence that the driver wore no glasses and that an expired operator's license required him to wear adequate glasses is admissible.²² However, where, in an action for a negligent collision, plaintiff admits that his eyes were bad, testimony as to the details or nature of the eye

Failure of the driver of a motor vehicle to stop, as required by law, at the scene of an accident in which he is involved is admissible in evidence as a circumstance tending to show a consciousness on his part of his responsibility for the accident.—Shaddy v. Daley, 76 P.2d 279, 58 Idaho 536.

trouble is properly excluded as not throwing any light on his ability to drive a car;²³ and the fact that a driver has only one eye is immaterial where he has a license to drive and it does not appear that he cannot operate an automobile properly or that his having only one eye contributed to the happening of the accident.²⁴

Arms, legs, or feet. It is proper to show that the driver of defendant's automobile had artificial legs,²⁵ as well as any act or omission to act arising from this condition which contributed to the happening of the accident;²⁶ but it is not proper to permit a witness, not knowing all the facts, to state his opinion that a driver so maimed could not act as efficiently in an emergency as a normal person;²⁷ and a claimed fact that defendant driver had a sore foot is immaterial where he had a license to drive and it does not appear that he could not operate an automobile properly or that the sore foot contributed to the happening of the accident.²⁸ Where defendant claims that the fact that plaintiff motorist had only one arm was an impediment contributing to the collision, the testimony of qualified witnesses is admissible to show plaintiff's competency to drive an automobile.²⁹

Where person involved in accident or collision is a minor, it has been held, notwithstanding some authority to the contrary,³⁰ that his age,³¹ intelligence,³² and experience³³ may be considered.

(2) Intoxication or Use of Intoxicants

In connection with other evidence, evidence of the intoxication at or near the time of a motor vehicle accident or collision of a driver or other person involved in the accident or collision is admissible as bearing on the question of negligence or contributory negligence.

Evidence of the intoxication of defendant,³⁴ or of the driver of his motor vehicle,³⁵ at or shortly after the time of the accident is admissible as evidence of a circumstance to be considered with other facts in evidence in determining the question of negligence, at least where other evidence as to negligence is conflicting or subject to different inferences.³⁶ Likewise evidence of the intoxication of plaintiff or decedent,³⁷ or of the driver of the motor vehicle in which plaintiff or decedent was riding as a passenger,³⁸ at or near the time of the accident is admissible as bearing on the question of contributory negligence. Also, evidence of drinking of intoxicating liquor by the driver of a vehicle involved in the accident,³⁹ or by occupants of the vehicle he was

If shown to have been known to guest, driver's drinking may bear on the question of contributory negligence in an action by the guest.—Metrinko v. Witherell, 188 A. 213, 134 Me. 483.

Extent of drinking

(1) Although there was no claim that defendant motorist was heavily intoxicated, nevertheless, in connection with other circumstances, such as weariness due to lack of sleep, the extent to which he had been drinking was circumstance that jury had right to consider in deciding whether proper lookout had been kept.—Jolley v. Clemens, 33 P.2d 51, 28 Cal.App.2d 55.

driving,⁴⁰ prior to the accident and on the same day is admissible, in connection with other circumstances, as bearing on the care exercised by the driver and the issue of negligence or contributory negligence; and testimony of officers who arrived on the scene shortly after the accident as to drinking by the driver of defendant's taxicab and the fact that the driver's employer took charge of him after the accident has been held admissible.⁴¹

A witness may be permitted to state that a driver's breath smelled of liquor,⁴² as well as to testify to acts and conduct from which an inference that he was under the influence of liquor⁴³ to such an extent as to affect his driving⁴⁴ might be drawn; and, where he had an opportunity to observe a driver's conduct, a witness may state his opinion that the driver was intoxicated.⁴⁵ However, other evidence,⁴⁶ or the absence of other evidence,⁴⁷ in a particular case may render inadmissible evidence offered to show intoxication or drinking.

Competent evidence in explanation or rebuttal of other evidence previously introduced by the adverse party to show drinking⁴⁸ or lack of drinking⁴⁹ by a person involved in the accident or collision is admissible.

Drinking habitually or on other occasions. Ordinarily evidence that the driver of an automobile involved in an accident or collision was in the habit of drinking intoxicating liquor,⁵⁰ or was intoxicated⁵¹ or used intoxicants⁵² on one or more oc-

One to two and one-half hours after accident

Idaho.—Maier v. Minidoka County Motor Co., 105 P.2d 1076, 61 Idaho 642.

In connection with, or absence of, other evidence

(1) Testimony of qualified witnesses that automobile driver had the odor of liquor on his breath at the time of a collision was competent when coupled with evidence that automobile was zigzagging as it approached point of collision and driver had his head drooped over steering wheel.—Cheatham v. Chartrau, 176 S.W.2d 865, 237 Mo.App. 793.

(2) On the other hand, testimony that witness smelled alcohol on breath of driver of truck striking pedestrian is inadmissible where there is no evidence of intoxication and no evidence of conduct or appearance, other than the evidence in question, from which a reasonable inference of intoxication could be drawn.—Critz v. Donovan, 137 A. 665, 289 Pa. 381.

(3) Where primary negligence is not established, it is not error to reject evidence of the odor of liquor on the breath of defendant driver.—Fleming v. McMillan, 26 S.E.2d 8, 125 W.Va. 356

Particular evidence

47. Or.—Lynch v. Clark, 194 P.2d 416.

Subsequent intoxication

Where the accident occurred before noon, testimony that driver of automobile was under influence of liquor late in afternoon or evening of day of accident was incompetent in absence of evidence that driver had been drinking during the forenoon of that day and before the accident, or that he was to any extent intoxicated, or under the influence of liquor at the time of, or prior to, the accident.—Tipton v. Estill Ice Co., 132 S. W.2d 347, 279 Ky. 793.

Conduct consistent with sobriety

In the absence of any other evidence of drinking or intoxication during the trip, evidence of conduct of a driver after the collision is inadmissible to prove intoxication where such conduct, although claimed to be peculiar, may be regarded as a natural and probable result of shock and a severe head injury and is as consistent with sobriety as with intoxication.—Law v. Gallagher, 197 A. 479, 9 W.W.Harr., Del., 189.

Opinions

(1) Where there is no sufficient evidence of facts showing the likelihood that the driver of an automobile was intoxicated, the opinions of witnesses as to whether or not he was intoxicated are not admissible.—Laubach v. Colley, 129 A. 88, 283 Pa. 366.

(2) A witness should not be permitted to state that in his opinion plaintiff driver "had been drinking," particularly where the evidence as a whole shows that he does not mean that plaintiff was intoxicated.—Clyde v. Grill, 172 N.Y.S. 136.

casions remote from the date of the accident or collision, is inadmissible. However, where there is an issue in the case as to defendant's having been negligent in that he entrusted his motor vehicle to a person known by him to be unfit and incompetent to drive the vehicle, evidence of the driver's intoxication at other times,⁵³ or of his habits for many years with respect to the use of liquor,⁵⁴ is admissible.

Intoxication of witness. Evidence as to the intoxication of a witness at the time of the accident which does not show that he was too drunk to know what happened is properly excluded.⁵⁵

Presence of liquor or liquor bottles. Evidence of the presence of liquor in a motor vehicle involved in an accident or collision is admissible⁵⁶ except where there is no evidence that the driver had been drinking prior to the accident or was intoxicated at the time thereof.⁵⁷ A whisky bottle found near the scene of the accident, or evidence of the finding thereof, is inadmissible where there is no evidence identifying the bottle as belonging to the party against whom the evidence is sought to be introduced⁵⁸ or as belonging to any occupant of his vehicle,⁵⁹ or there is no evidence that such party had been drinking on the day of the accident.⁶⁰

c. Characteristics, Habits, and Traits of Horses

Evidence of the habits and traits of a horse is admissible where there is an issue in the case to which it is relevant.

In an action involving the frightening of a horse, evidence of the characteristics, habits, and traits of horses generally,⁶¹ or of the horse in question,⁶² is ordinarily admissible; but, where there is no issue of contributory negligence, evidence of reputation of the horse is properly excluded,⁶³ and, in an action to recover damages for injuries to the occupants of a buggy, evidence of the disposition of the horse is irrelevant where there was no showing that the horse was frightened or was unmanageable before the collision.⁶⁴ The fact that there were handholds on the reins is not admissible as evidence of the wildness of a horse.⁶⁵

d. Conditions, Dimensions, Equipment, or Damage to Motor Vehicles

Evidence of the damaged condition of a motor vehicle after the accident or collision and before the condition has changed is generally admissible.

Evidence of the condition⁶⁶ or equipment⁶⁷ of, or damage to,⁶⁸ a motor vehicle or parts thereof may be material, relevant, and admissible; but in some cases it is otherwise,⁶⁹ as where the defects or missing equipment had nothing to do with the accident or collision⁷⁰ or plaintiff rests his right to recover on the humanitarian doctrine.⁷¹

Evidence of the condition of the vehicle, or of parts or equipment thereof, after the accident or collision is generally admissible⁷² where there is sufficient evidence of identification⁷³ and the condition has not changed substantially since the accident or collision.⁷⁴ Where defendant owns more than one truck, it is error to admit evidence of repairs to all of his trucks,⁷⁵ or to one of such trucks, without further evidence identifying such truck as the one involved in the accident.⁷⁶

Trailer. Evidence of the width,⁷⁷ length, and weight⁷⁸ of a trailer involved in the accident or collision is admissible; and evidence that two and one-half miles from the place of the accident the trailer was not tracking the truck, but extended too far in one direction, is not objectionable as being too remote where the driver did not stop, readjust the load, or make any effort to remedy the position of the trailer.⁷⁹

Knowledge of defects. Where defects in defendant's vehicle were connected with the accident or collision, evidence showing or tending to show defendant's knowledge of such defects is admissible,⁸⁰ as is also the testimony of the owner of the vehicle or his agents as to inspections and examinations made before the occurrence of the accident or collision.⁸¹

e. Control and Ability to Stop

When relevant, competent evidence bearing on the driver's control of, and ability to stop, a motor vehicle is admissible.

When relevant, competent evidence bearing on the question whether the driver of a motor vehicle had the vehicle under control,⁸² or bearing on his ability to stop the vehicle in a situation necessitating a stop,⁸³ is admissible; but such evidence is

Evidence that high wind was blowing across highway, so as to render it difficult to retain control of automobile traveling at high rate of speed, was properly admitted.—Kellogg Sales Co. v. Holroyd, 73 P.2d 139, 181 Okl. 82.

83. Wis.—Georgeson v. Nielsen, 252 N.W. 576, 214 Wis. 191.

Evidence of distance in which defendant actually stopped his vehicle is admissible where the distance in-

properly excluded where it is not relevant or material to any question in the case.⁸⁴ Where the overcrowded condition of the front seat of an automobile necessarily restricts and hampers the driver's freedom of action to exercise the necessary control in the event of an emergency, the fact that up to the time of the collision he did not have any difficulty in operating the car is immaterial.⁸⁵

f. Custom or Common Practice

A custom or common practice at the place of the accident may be admissible on the question of contributory negligence, but it is not admissible to justify negligence, or where it is contrary to a statute or ordinance, or it would not be of sufficient aid to warrant its admission.

A custom or common practice at the place of the accident may be admissible on the question of contributory negligence;⁸⁶ but it is not admissible on the question of defendant motorist's negligence in the absence of a showing that he had knowledge, or was chargeable with knowledge, thereof;⁸⁷ and, furthermore, it is not admissible to justify negligence,⁸⁸ or to convert negligent conduct into due care,⁸⁹ or where, under the circumstances, it is not evidence of either negligence or due care,⁹⁰ or where, in view of the collateral issue it would raise and the danger of its misuse, it would not be of sufficient aid to justify its admission.⁹¹ According to the weight of authority, evidence of a custom which is contrary to a statute or ordinance is not admissible;⁹² but it has been held admissible on the question of contributory negligence,⁹³ as where violation of the statute was only evidence of negligence, and not negligence per se, the custom was not unreasonable as a matter of law, and defendant's driver was familiar therewith.⁹⁴ In applying the foregoing rules, various customs or common practices have been held admissible,⁹⁵ while others have been held inadmissible.⁹⁶

(2) Evidence that it was common

Yielding right of way to loaded truck. A custom for an unloaded truck to yield the right of way to a loaded truck on a narrow road or at a narrow or defective place in a highway may, under certain conditions, be admissible on the issue of contributory negligence;⁹⁷ but it is not material where the evidence shows that both loaded and unloaded trucks passed without difficulty at the place of the collision.⁹⁸

Children playing on street. Testimony as to the customary playing of children at or near the scene of the accident has been held relevant in an action for the death of, or injuries to, a child,⁹⁹ but has also been held immaterial where, on the occasion in question, only two children were on the street and they were in plain sight.¹

g. Death or Personal Injury

In an action for death or personal injuries, evidence as to the clothing worn by the decedent or plaintiff, as well as testimony of a physician who attended him, may be admissible.

In an action to recover damages for personal injuries occasioned by the operation of a motor vehicle, the evidence admissible to prove the existence, nature, and extent of plaintiff's injuries includes the clothing worn by him at the time of the accident and showing cuts and blood stains,² the testimony of a physician or surgeon who examined, attended, treated, or operated on, plaintiff,³ and, within proper limitations, the testimony of a medical expert⁴ or the testimony or deposition of a nonexpert witness who observed plaintiff before and after the accident.⁵ Also, it is proper to ask plaintiff whether he told defendant's driver after the collision that he, plaintiff, had not been injured as a result of the collision.⁶ On the other hand, the fact that plaintiff has received workmen's compensation is incompetent to establish the fact of injury.⁷

In a death action, clothing worn by decedent at the time of the accident may be admissible,⁸ but is properly excluded where it would not furnish proof of the fact which it is claimed it would show.⁹ The admissibility of evidence of the appearance and condition of the body of deceased is discussed in Death § 85.

According to the weight of authority, evidence of the death of or injury to another person in the same accident or collision is admissible;¹⁰ but there is also authority tending to the contrary.¹¹

h. Identification

Competent evidence tending to identify a motor vehicle, involved in the accident or collision, or the operator thereof, or a person killed in the accident, is admissible.

(6) Custom among automobile dealers to permit the use of their cars by customers as a matter of courtesy is not relevant to, or admissible on, the question of what the automobile in question was being used for at the time of the accident.—*Wright v. Competent evidence tending to identify a motor vehicle involved in the accident or collision,¹² or the operator thereof,¹³ or a person killed in the accident,¹⁴ is admissible. Testimony offered to controvert other testimony of identification is properly excluded where it is too general and indefinite to have any probative force;¹⁵ and, where there is no suggestion that defendant's truck bore his name, it is proper to exclude a question to a witness, who was not present at the time and place of the accident, as to whether he has ever seen trucks bearing defendant's name.¹⁶

1. Insurance

Evidence that a party is protected by insurance is inadmissible unless it is relevant and material to an issue in the case; but evidence admissible for a legitimate purpose is not to be excluded because it discloses the fact that the defendant is carrying insurance.

Evidence that either plaintiff¹⁷ or defendant¹⁸ is protected by insurance is inadmissible except where it is relevant and material to an issue in the case;¹⁹ but evidence admissible for a legitimate purpose is not to be excluded because it discloses the fact that defendant is carrying insurance;²⁰ and evidence that plaintiff carries accident insurance may be received, in the discretion of the court, when offered in connection with proof that he is feigning his injuries, and for the purpose of showing a motive for feigning and his interest in doing so.²¹ Defendant is not entitled to introduce evidence as to the amount of insurance carried by it by reason of the fact that plaintiff's counsel, on examination of jurors, has inquired into their connection with insurance companies.²²

j. Lack of License, Permit, or Registration

Ordinarily, evidence that a motor vehicle involved in an accident or collision was not registered, or that the operator thereof was not licensed, at the time of the accident or collision is not admissible.

Ordinarily, evidence that the motor vehicle in question was not registered or licensed in the state,²³ or that the operator thereof was not licensed,²⁴ at the time of the accident or collision is inadmissible, as is also evidence that the operator's license was suspended after the accident²⁵ and testimony of defendant that he has not lost his state license.²⁶ However, evidence of the lack of an operator's license has been held admissible as bearing on some issues or questions,²⁷ such as the question of the owner's negligence in permitting the operation of his motor vehicle by a driver known to be incompetent or inexperienced,²⁸ an issue as to

In absence of evidence of proximate causal connection between defendant's violation of law, consisting of operating a motor vehicle without a proper driver's license, and the injuries complained of, it is not error to exclude evidence of such violation. —Wade v. Drinkard, 45 S.E.2d 231, 76 Ga.App. 159.

In action for injuries caused by negligence of minor who drove truck with consent of truck owner's employee, who was not present at time of accident, cross-examination on whether such employee was a licensed driver was properly excluded. —Kalinowski v. Odlewany, 287 N.W. 344, 289 Mich. 684.

Reason license not renewed

In action for damages arising out of automobile collision, where it was shown that driver of defendant's truck did not have license to operate motor vehicles as required by statute, permitting defendant to show reason that driver of his truck did not renew his license was error. —Watson v. whether the vehicle was a family car,²⁹ and the question of a minor driver's negligence in operating a motor vehicle when he was inexperienced and without training;³⁰ and there is some authority for the view that it may properly be considered on the general question of negligence.³¹

Where, at the time of the accident, the operator had a license which had never been revoked, even though ground for revocation existed, it is proper to exclude evidence that, when he applied for the license, he falsely stated that his license or right to operate had never been suspended or revoked.³²

Evidence of the lack of a permit for the hauling of a load exceeding the weight permitted by statute has been held admissible in view of a defense that the loaded truck was too heavy for parking on a dirt shoulder.³³

k. Lights

Evidence respecting lights and flares at the time of, or immediately before or after, the accident or collision, or at a prior time not too remote, is admissible.

Evidence bearing on the question whether a motor vehicle involved in an accident or collision was lighted at the time of the accident or collision,³⁴ and, if so, to what extent,³⁵ is admissible; and, provided it is not too remote,³⁶ evidence as to whether the vehicle was lighted, and, if so, to what extent, before³⁷ or after,³⁸ the accident or collision is admissible. It has been held that evidence of inspection³⁹ or lack of inspection⁴⁰ of the regular lighting system of a truck is admissible; but it has also been held that evidence of whether or not defendant has had the lights of his automobile tested is inadmissible.⁴¹

On an issue as to whether the time of an accident was such that defendant should have had lights on his automobile, evidence that before the accident other automobiles had their lights burning,⁴² and that lights in a near-by village were lit shortly after the accident,⁴³ is admissible. Also, evidence of the lights burning on another motor vehicle which was at or near the scene of the collision at the time thereof is admissible to show the surrounding facts and circumstances⁴⁴ or, where plaintiff was blinded by such lights, on the question of his contributory negligence.⁴⁵ On the other hand, evidence that other trucks do not carry clearance lights as required by statute is inadmissible.⁴⁶

(1) Evidence as to whether the lights on a truck and trailer were dim or bright when turned on is immaterial, where the controverted fact in the case is whether they were turned off entirely.—Silvey v. Harm, 8 P.2d 570, 120 Cal.App. 561.

(2) Testimony as to the distance the headlights of defendant's vehicle, struck in the rear by plaintiff's vehicle, would reveal objects at the point of collision is inadmissible in the absence of other testimony showing substantial similarity in the kind, character, or position on the respective vehicles of plaintiff and defendant, of the lights, or the condition of the weather, or the degree of darkness when the witness made his observations.—Fenton v. Missouri Motor Distributing Corporation, Mo. App., 52 S.W.2d 213.

Evidence as to speed and evidence as to lights are to be regarded differently in respect of remoteness, since the speed of a motor vehicle is peculiarly under the control of the driver and is intrinsically variable, while the lights of the vehicle are more constant and mechanical, the driver is not likely to extinguish the lights and continue in the dark, and, if one light is out because of some defect, it is not likely to go on again in a short space of time.—Kennedy Transfer Co. v. In an intersectional accident or collision case, evidence that the intersection was well lighted is admissible,⁴⁷ as is also evidence respecting a traffic light.⁴⁸

Where one of the vehicles was standing upon the highway at night, evidence that there was or was not in the vehicle a flashlight for use in case of trouble is admissible,⁴⁹ as is evidence of the setting out of warning flares after the collision⁵⁰ and evidence of the lack of flares required by statute under the circumstances;⁵¹ but it has also been held proper to exclude evidence of a failure to use flares where they are not required by statute.⁵² Evidence that certain kinds of fuses, required by statute to be set out when a truck is parked at night on the pavement, are impractical is not admissible.⁵³

Evidence showing that plaintiff, injured while riding his bicycle, was violating an ordinance requiring lights on bicycles at the time in question, is admissible as bearing on his contributory negligence;⁵⁴ but the absence of a headlight on a bicycle is immaterial where it did not proximately contribute to the accident, as where the bicycle was struck in the rear and there was a red reflector, visible for two hundred feet, on the rear of the bicycle.⁵⁵

lided with the rear of another motor vehicle shortly after the latter had stopped, it is proper to receive evidence respecting the stop light of the latter vehicle.⁵⁶

I. Manner and Circumstances of Accident or Collision

Competent evidence of the manner in, and circumstances under, which the accident or collision occurred is admissible.

It is competent to prove all the circumstances under which the accident or collision occurred.⁵⁷ A witness who observed the accident or collision may testify as to how it happened or occurred;⁵⁸ and he is not confined to what he saw or heard,⁵⁹ but may also testify that he did not see or hear certain things.⁶⁰ However, an extrajudicial statement of plaintiff guest that he cannot accurately describe what occurred is without probative force, and is inadmissible, as original testimony tending to establish what occurred.⁶¹ A witness who did not see the collision, but who observed the conditions at the scene thereof shortly thereafter, should not be permitted to state his conclusions as to how it occurred⁶² or as to whether an animal was struck by a motor vehicle from behind or otherwise.⁶³ An eyewitness may detail the position of colliding vehicles with relation to each other⁶⁴ and to the street,⁶⁵ and may even be permitted to state whether there was room for one to pass the other on the right in the roadway,⁶⁶ but not whether an automobile had room to pass in safety.⁶⁷

In an action to recover damages for the death of, or injuries to, a pedestrian alleged to have been struck by a motor vehicle, evidence that the pedestrian was standing within a safety zone when struck is admissible,⁶⁸ as is also evidence of the direction in which he was thrown by impact with the vehicle;⁶⁹ and it is not improper to allow a witness to describe the pedestrian's position by illustration;⁷⁰ but evidence as to the part of a highway upon which a pedestrian was walking one thousand feet from the place of the accident is without probative value on the question of where he was at the time of the accident, and is properly excluded.⁷¹ It is proper to exclude evidence as to whether the vehicle could have passed the pedestrian without striking him where it does not appear material to any claim of either party;⁷² but, where there is some evidence that the accident would not have occurred if defendant driver had kept to the right of a safety zone, further evidence that there was nothing to prevent him from keeping to the right should not be excluded.⁷³

m. Other Judicial Proceedings

Ordinarily, and except in so far as it embraces an admission by defendant, evidence relating to civil suits between different parties, or to criminal proceedings against the driver of a motor vehicle involved in the accident or collision, is inadmissible.

Evidence relative to the arrest and conviction or acquittal of the driver of a motor vehicle on a criminal charge arising out of the accident or collision in question,⁷⁴ or on a charge of the commission of a crime on another occasion,⁷⁵ is ordinarily inadmissible; but sometimes evidence of this nature is held admissible on cross-examination of the driver,⁷⁶ or where it consists of evidence that defendant pleaded guilty to a charge of violating a criminal statute in connection with the accident⁷⁷ or that the driver, on the advice of counsel, dismissed his appeal from a conviction.⁷⁸ On the question whether the driver was an agent or employee of defendant, evidence that defendant or his representative put up bond for the driver's appearance in court⁷⁹ or paid the driver's fine⁸⁰ is admissible; but evidence that defendant paid the driver's fine should not, in the absence of other evidence, be received to show that the driver was acting within the course of his employment.⁸¹

Before coroner. The testimony of defendant before a coroner, as to what he was doing, where he had come from, and where he was going at the time of the collision is admissible against him as an admission on his part;⁸² and, furthermore, the testimony of defendant's driver at the inquest has been held admissible.⁸³

Verdict

(1) Formerly, in Illinois, the verdict of a coroner's jury was admissible in evidence, provided the jury did not exceed their authority.—Devine v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., 110 N.E. 780, 270 Ill. 504, Ann.Cas. 1917B 387—42 C.J. p 1230 notes 2, 3.

Civil suits. Evidence that other similar suits have been brought⁸⁴ or are pending⁸⁵ against defendant is inadmissible, as is also the record of a suit by defendant against his driver for money owing in which defendant did not seek to recover damages for injury to his vehicle;⁸⁶ but the declaration filed by defendant in a previous case in which he sued plaintiff for damages from the same accident, defendant having sanctioned its allegations that his car was driven by his agent and servant by testifying in support of them, is properly received as an admission.⁸⁷

A statement made by the driver of a motor truck several months after the accident at the trial of an action in a municipal court and tending to show that he was working in the line of his duty for his employer at the time of the accident is not rendered admissible against the employer by the facts that the latter was present in court and remained silent.⁸⁸

n. Physical Conditions at Scene of Accident or Collision

- (1) In general
- (2) At subsequent time

(1) In General

Ordinarily, evidence of the condition of the road or street, the presence and location of directional or warning signs, signals, markings, or devices, and other physical conditions existing at the scene of the accident or collision is admissible.

Evidence of the physical conditions existing at the scene of the accident or collision is ordinarily admissible;⁸⁹ and this is true of evidence of such matters as the character⁹⁰ and condition⁹¹ of the road, the nature of an intersection,⁹² the presence of smoke over the highway,⁹³ and the presence and location of stop signs or other directional or warning signs, signals, markings, or devices.⁹⁴ Particular evidence of this nature may, however, be immaterial and inadmissible in certain cases,⁹⁵ as where it concerns the condition of,⁹⁶ or visibility on,⁹⁷ the street or highway at another point or place, turning markers at other intersections on the same street,⁹⁸ a sign directed to the drivers of horses only,⁹⁹ or a sign warning of the presence of children, where the accident occurred on Saturday night several hundred feet from a schoolhouse.¹ Proof that similar cars had skidded at the same place is of no probative value on the question of the dangerous character of the roadway at the time of the accident or collision, unless the evidence also shows that the conditions and management were the same.²

Knowledge of conditions. It is held that evidence of defendant driver's knowledge of dangerous conditions at an intersection is admissible,³ but that evidence that he did not know that a street was an arterial one and did not see a stop sign because of an obstruction is inadmissible,⁴ and that a driver should not be questioned as to his knowledge of the proximity of a schoolhouse where neither the school building nor the school grounds abut upon the highway upon which he was driving.⁵

(2) At Subsequent Time

The testimony of a witness describing the position of the motor vehicles involved, gouges in the highway, the presence and location upon the highway of spots, tire tracks, skid marks, or other marks, or glass or other parts of a motor vehicle, or other conditions existing at the scene of the accident or collision after its occurrence is admissible where the witness observed such conditions before they were changed.

Witnesses may be permitted to describe the conditions at the scene of the accident or collision after its occurrence,⁶ such as the position of the motor vehicles involved,⁷ the existence and location of marks,⁸ spots,⁹ on, or scars, gashes, gouges, or indentations in,¹⁰ the highway, the presence of parts of a motor vehicle,¹¹ or the place where an article, which a pedestrian was wearing or carrying when struck, was found.¹² This is true where such conditions were observed by the witnesses soon after the accident or collision¹³ and before the conditions existing at the time of the accident or collision had changed.¹⁴ Indeed, some authorities have held

Where, in an action to recover damages for the death of a person struck by an automobile, there is other evidence showing that the clothing of deceased caught on the automobile and that she was dragged, it is not error to admit the testimony of a witness that he saw a button, comb, piece of cloth, and some blood along skid marks, although there is no showing that the articles belonged to deceased, or at what time the witness arrived on the scene of the accident.—Remington v. admissible testimony descriptive of the scene of the accident or collision, and conditions thereat, as viewed the day following the collision,¹⁵ or two¹⁶ or several¹⁷ days thereafter; and, in the case of conditions of some permanency, such as a stop sign,¹⁸ a hedge four feet high,¹⁹ or a gouge or indentation in a hard-surfaced pavement,²⁰ evidence of their existence a considerable time after the collision may be admissible.

On the other hand, it has been held that, in the absence of affirmative evidence that conditions remained the same as at the time of the accident, testimony concerning marks on the highway, or other temporary conditions at the scene, observed the day following the accident,²¹ or only four hours after the accident,²² is inadmissible, as is also evidence of what investigators found at the place of the accident at a later, but unknown, date,²³ and evidence of the reasons why the city, after the collision, placed a stop sign at the intersection in question.²⁴

its occurrence is admissible,²⁵ at least where the observation was made before any change had taken place,²⁶ and, it is held, even though the vehicles had been removed before he arrived at the scene.²⁷ It is proper to permit witnesses who visited and examined the scene of the accident or collision a comparatively short time after it occurred to describe the automobile tracks, skid marks, or other marks or imprints of a wheel or tire, which they observed,²⁸ and, where at the time of their visit they saw one or more of the automobiles involved in the accident or collision, they may be permitted to identify the tracks as those which were made by one or more of the automobiles.²⁹

According to some authorities, the testimony of a witness concerning tire tracks or skid marks which he observed at the scene of, and within a reasonable time after, the accident or collision is ordinarily admissible,³⁰ the length of time intervening between the accident and the observation,³¹ and the physical conditions surrounding the place of the accident which would affect the marks, such as the amount of travel on the highway and the wetness or dryness of the surface,³² are elements which ordinarily affect the weight, rather than the admissibility, of the testimony; and testimony as to tire tracks or skid marks observed five³³ or twelve³⁴ hours, or the first morning,³⁵ or even the second morning,³⁶ after the accident or collision is admissible. According to other authorities, however, testimony concerning tire tracks or skid marks observed twelve hours,³⁷ or the next day,³⁸ or three days,³⁹ after the accident or collision is inadmissible in the absence of further evidence identifying the tracks or marks or showing that conditions had not changed.

Measurements. In connection with other evidence, and where it will aid the jury, evidence of measurements made at the scene, after the occurrence, of the accident may be received.⁴⁰ Where plaintiff testified that after the accident he made certain measurements, without stating whether defendant was then present or not, evidence by defendant that no measurements were made while he was present is admissible, not to contradict plaintiff's testimony⁴¹ but to show that defendant was not a party to the measurements.⁴² A witness who has testified that he saw evidence of a collision a certain number of feet from the end of a bridge may properly be interrogated as to whether he bases his testimony on an actual measurement or a mere guess or approximation.⁴³

cident or collision occurred, is admissible in evidence for the purpose of illustrating and explaining the testimony of witnesses,⁴⁴ where it is shown that the map, plat, or photograph is approximately correct and accurate⁴⁵ and that the conditions existing when it was made or taken were substantially the same as when the accident or collision occurred;⁴⁶ but a photograph should not be admitted in evidence where it is obscure and indefinite in some of its details⁴⁷ and it appears from the testimony that the conditions of the foliage, shrubbery, and lighting were different at the time of the accident than when the photograph was taken;⁴⁸ nor should several photographs offered collectively be admitted in evidence where they differ in details and thereby conclusively show on their face that it is impossible to prove that all the conditions disclosed by them existed at the time of the accident.⁴⁹

It has been held that the testimony of a witness who is familiar with automobiles and their operation, and who examined the scene of collision the morning after its occurrence, when conditions were the same, as plaintiff was a guest of the driver,⁵³ is admissible; and, in this connection, evidence of a conversation in which arrangements for the trip were made is admissible.⁵⁴

p. Report of, or Failure to Report, Accident

Unless it is provided otherwise by statute, a driver's statutory report of a motor vehicle accident may be admissible for some purposes.

According to some authorities, the fact that the driver of a motor vehicle did⁵⁵ or did not⁵⁶ make a report of the accident, as required by statute, is inadmissible otherwise than for the purpose of affecting the credibility of the driver as a witness; and, under the express terms of a particular statute, no accident report, or any part thereof, or statement contained therein, is admissible in evidence for any purpose in the trial of any case arising out of the accident.⁵⁷ According to other authorities, however, failure to make the report is admissible in evidence as a circumstance tending to show consciousness on the driver's part of his responsibility for the accident,⁵⁸ and an omission in the report of a material fact known to him is evidence against him.⁵⁹ The report is not admissible to prove the agency of the driver for defendant;⁶⁰ but, where agency otherwise appears, it may be admissible as a declaration made in the course of the agency.⁶¹

q. Responsibility of Defendant for Operation of Motor Vehicle

(1) In general

- (2) Ownership of vehicle
- (3) Agency and authority of operator

(1) In General

Evidence tending to show that at the time and place of the accident or collision defendant did or did not have such control over the motor vehicle in question as to render him responsible for its operation is admissible.

Evidence of matters tending to show that at the time and place of the accident or collision defendant did or did not have such control over the motor vehicle in question as to render him responsible for its operation is admissible.⁶² Evidence that defendant's son or nephew, who drove defendant's motor vehicle on the occasion in question, frequently drove it is held admissible⁶³ to establish defendant's general consent to such use;⁶⁴ and testimony as to the driving of the automobile by different members of defendant's family is held competent to indicate the use made of the car;⁶⁵ but evidence that defendant's son, who drove defendant's car on the occasion in question, had previously driven other cars owned by defendant is inadmissible to show that the car in question was a family car.⁶⁶

Although defendant owner was riding in the vehicle at the time and place of the accident, he may show the circumstances under which another person was driving it as tending to prove that he had loaned the vehicle to the driver;⁶⁷ but, where defendant joint owner of the vehicle was present therein, it is immaterial that it was agreed with another joint owner that the latter should drive.⁶⁸

(2) Ownership of Vehicle

Competent evidence tending to show that defendant did or did not own the motor vehicle in question at the time of the accident or collision is admissible.

In an action to recover damages for injuries caused by the operation of a motor vehicle, competent evidence tending to show that defendant did or did not own the motor vehicle in question at the time of the accident or collision is admissible.⁷⁰ Under some statutes, the only way to prove ownership is by the production of a certificate of title;⁷¹ but, in the absence of statute, the evidence admissible includes extrajudicial statements relative to ownership made by defendant⁷² prior to,⁷³ or at the time of,⁷⁴ the accident or collision, as well as statements made by him thereafter and constituting admissions on his part.⁷⁵ Evidence that defendant company, through an attorney, settled a former claim for injury inflicted by the truck in question is admissible on the question of the ownership and control of the truck;⁷⁶ but a letter from the president of defendant company guaranteeing the payment of hospital charges is not admissible as an acknowledgment of defendant's ownership of the vehicle in question.⁷⁷

Evidence of a transfer, or lack of transfer, of ownership after the accident is immaterial on the question of ownership at the time of the accident;⁷⁸ and it is proper to refuse introduction of evidence of the circumstances surrounding defendant's purchase of automobiles other than the one in question.⁷⁹ Declarations as to ownership made by the driver of the automobile at such a time after the accident as not to constitute a part of the res gestæ are not admissible;⁸⁰ but, in connection with other evidence, declarations made by the driver at the place of the accident and immediately after its occurrence may be admissible.⁸¹

Statements of third persons. Where defendant claims that another person owned the automobile in question, evidence of statements made by such other person prior to the accident and at a time when he was not in possession of the automobile is not admissible,⁸² and, while statements made by such third person after the accident to the effect that defendant owned the car may be received in evidence for the purpose of contradicting the testimony of such person that he owned the car,⁸³ they are not admissible as assertions having substantive or independent evidentiary value.⁸⁴ Evidence that several days prior to the accident it was announced at a racing meet that defendant had entered the car in question in a race is inadmissible in the absence of other evidence showing that the announcement was made in the presence of defendant and that he acquiesced therein by remaining silent.⁸⁵

The opinion or conclusion of a witness as to the title or ownership of the motor vehicle is inadmissible.⁸⁶

Insurance. Evidence that defendant is carrying insurance covering the vehicle in question or liability for damages from its operation is admissible to show his ownership of, or interest in, the vehicle;⁸⁷ and evidence tending to show ownership of the vehicle is not to be excluded because it also discloses the fact of insurance.⁸⁸

License or application therefor. In connection with other evidence, the fact that defendant has been granted a license or certificate of registration,⁸⁹ or has applied for one,⁹⁰ covering the vehicle, may be shown in evidence on the question of ownership; but evidence of a dealer's application for a license plate is not competent to prove his ownership of a particular car, where no particular car is described in the application, and the plates are attached indiscriminately to any car the dealer owns when he is demonstrating it for the purpose of sale;⁹¹ and a letter from the department of licenses, addressed to plaintiff's attorney, stating that defendant was the owner of the license corresponding to the number of the vehicle, is incompetent to show ownership,⁹² as is also a certificate of a state official that the license number is in the name of defendant, according to the records of the department, where the certificate does not purport to be a transcript compared with the original record.⁹³

(3) Agency and Authority of Operator

In a case of death or injury resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle by a person other than the defendant, competent evidence bearing on the questions whether or not such person was the agent, servant, or employee of, the defendant, and was or was not acting within the scope of his authority, is admissible, and is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that it discloses that the defendant is protected by insurance.

In an action to recover damages for death or injuries occasioned by the operation of a motor vehicle by a person other than defendant, competent evidence bearing on the questions whether or not the driver or operator was an agent, servant, or employee of defendant,⁹⁴ and was or was not acting within the scope of his authority at the time,⁹⁵ is admissible. The evidence admissible on these questions includes, within proper limitations,⁹⁶ the testimony of the driver or operator.⁹⁷ Under the rules of evidence, however, particular evidence may be inadmissible on these questions,⁹⁸ or may be inadmissible in the absence of other evidence,⁹⁹ or inadmissible as positive, affirmative, and substantive evidence, as distinguished from evidence impeaching the credibility of a witness.¹ A statute providing that registration of the vehicle in defendant's name is evidence of his responsibility for the conduct of the driver is not applicable where the vehicle in question is not registered in the name of defendant as owner.²

Consent to, or instructions prohibiting or limiting, use. Ordinarily, evidence of instructions given to the driver by defendant or his supervisory representative is admissible on the question whether the driver was acting within the scope of his employment;³ but under some circumstances it is otherwise.⁴ So, also, evidence is held admissible in support of plaintiff's contention that defendant had no rule prohibiting the taking of an automobile by an employee;⁵ but evidence that the driver had not been expressly warned not to drive members of other employee's families to their homes is immaterial in the absence of evidence that defendant had knowledge that the driver had previously engaged in such practice.⁶

Under a statute making, in case of an accident,

a person operating another person's motor vehicle, with the express or implied consent of the owner, the owner's agent in the operation of the vehicle, it has been held, on the one hand, that defendant owner is not entitled to show the limited extent of his initial consent to his servant's operation of a motor vehicle,⁷ and, on the other hand, that, where defendant claims that he instructed his employee to limit the use of the vehicle to the employer's business, testimony concerning correspondence between defendant and the employee relating to the accident is admissible to show defendant's reaction on discovery of the employee's personal use of the car and as bearing on the question whether the employee was operating the vehicle with defendant's consent at the time of the accident.⁸

Insurance. Evidence which is otherwise competent to show the relationship existing between defendant and an alleged agent or servant is not inadmissible because it incidentally discloses that defendant possesses protective insurance;⁹ and in a number of cases the fact that defendant is protected by liability or other insurance in respect of the vehicle in question is held admissible as bearing on the issue of whether the driver of the vehicle is an

4. Original negligence in intrusting vehicle to minors

In action against owner of motor vehicle who had intrusted it to minors who were too young to have driver's licenses, he was not entitled to introduce evidence as to where and by what minor the vehicle was to be driven, since owner could not be exonerated from his original negligence of intrusting the vehicle to minors because of alleged fact that his instructions to minors were not followed in operation of vehicle.—Atkins v. Churchill, Wash., 194 P.2d 364.

Lack of notice to plaintiff

In action against owner of used car lot for injuries to prospective customer when struck on lot by motor vehicle set in motion by another prospective customer, evidence that defendant had forbidden salesmen to allow customers to start any vehicle unless salesmen were present, and that no vehicle was to be driven on the lot, was properly excluded as not binding on plaintiff in the absence of notice thereof.—Siebel v. independent contractor or an employee of defendant or of some other person.¹⁰ On the other hand, a liability insurance policy or rider is inadmissible where it does not in any way show or afford proof that, at the time of the accident, the vehicle in question was being operated by an agent of insured.¹¹

A "nonownership" policy insuring against liability for death or injury resulting from the use of motor vehicles in the business of insured is admissible where the name of the driver in question appears in the schedule;¹² but it is not admissible where it does not name any particular employees and the agent or employee in question was, at the time of the accident, driving his own motor vehicle on his way to work,¹³ or the evidence shows that he at no time drove his vehicle under such circumstances as to give the right of control over its operation to insured.¹⁴

r. Speed

Competent evidence of the rate of speed at which a motor vehicle was traveling at the instant of, or immediately before or after, an accident or collision in which it was involved is admissible. Physical facts, including the force of the impact or collision as shown by its effect on the vehicle and its occupants, may be considered in determining speed.

Ordinarily, in an action to recover damages for death, or for injury to person or property, caused by the operation of a motor vehicle, competent evidence of the rate of speed at which such motor vehicle, or another motor vehicle involved in the accident or collision, was traveling¹⁵ at the instant of,¹⁶ or immediately before¹⁷ or after,¹⁸ the accident or collision is admissible; and this is true, even though defendant admits liability and the case is tried on the question of damages only;¹⁹ but in some cases it is immaterial and properly excluded, as where a cause of action for the death of a pedestrian is rested on the last clear chance rule²⁰ or, in a collision case, the evidence relates to the speed of a vehicle on the wrong side of the road and a collision was inevitable if such vehicle was moving.²¹

While evidence of the speed of the motor vehicle at a remote time or place is not admissible,²² except

Evidence of racing

Court may properly say in its discretion that remote evidence of racing will not be first received, or received at all, unless evidence shows racing immediately preceding accident.—Glass v. Hutchinson Ice Cream Co., 243 N.W. 352, 214 Iowa 825.

Limits of discretion

The discretion contemplated does not permit admission of evidence of speed at other points unless they are of such close proximity that reasonable inference could be drawn that it was continued to point of accident, or if more remote, there is evidence of fact or circumstance from which a reasonable inference could be drawn that speed was continued at approx-

of the trip and the place of the accident has been held admissible²⁸ as tending to show the time of the accident or collision.²⁹

In addition to the testimony of witnesses,³⁰ physical facts may be considered in determining the speed of a motor vehicle involved in an accident or collision.³¹ Particular matters of which evidence may be received and considered on the question of speed include the distance which the motor vehicle traveled after the brakes were applied,³² the skid marks which it made,³³ and the force or violence of the impact or collision,³⁴ as shown by its effect on the vehicle,³⁵ its occupants,³⁶ and personal property being carried therein.³⁷ Also, evidence of the speed of a street car, alongside which the vehicle in question was being driven, is admissible,³⁸ as is also evidence of the rate of speed at which another vehicle was traveling where it was leading a procession of vehicles closely following each other and defendant's vehicle was a part of the procession.³⁹ While incompetent testimony relating to, or offered for the purpose of proving, speed is inadmissible,⁴⁰ the fact that a witness testifying to speed had only a brief time to observe it affects merely the weight, and not the competency, of his testimony.⁴¹

Discretion held abused

(1) In admitting testimony as to speed at distance of two miles and five miles from place of accident where there was no evidence of any fact or circumstance from which a reasonable inference could be drawn that such speed was maintained over intervening distance.—Prince v. Petersen, supra.

(2) In excluding as too remote evidence of speed one-half mile from intersection where collision occurred, where evidence as to speed at which motorist approached intersection was conflicting and the record failed to show the speed at which motorist was traveling at distance of more than one hundred feet from the intersection.—Hanson v. Schrick, 85 P.2d 355, 160 Or. 397.

Evidence of speed derived from the fixed position of the hand or needle of a speedometer after the collision is admissible,⁴² except where the mechanism of the particular speedometer is such that it registered only the highest speed attained since the prior release of the hand to return to zero, and not necessarily the speed at or immediately preceding the collision.⁴³

Reasonable or improper speed. Evidence of conditions and circumstances is to be considered in determining whether the speed at which a vehicle was being driven at the time of the accident or collision was reasonable or dangerous;⁴⁴ and it is held that the testimony of a witness as to the speed of a particular vehicle is properly excluded where, under the physical facts, the speed of such vehicle immediately before, or at the time of, the accident could not have been excessive.⁴⁵ Evidence that a district ahead is thickly populated is properly excluded on the question of proper speed;⁴⁶ where there is no contention or evidence of excessive speed at the scene of the accident, evidence of speed in excess of the legal limit in another block is irrelevant and inadmissible;⁴⁷ and, where there is no evidence of speed in excess of the permissible rate before the collision, evidence of speed higher than the permissible rate while the vehicle, which was at first parked at the point of collision, was being driven away after the collision is inadmissible.⁴⁸

Customary or average speed. It is proper to exclude evidence of the average speed of motor vehicles at the place of the accident,⁴⁹ as well as evidence as to whether the bus driver in question was making the usual speed through traffic;⁵⁰ but, where one party has been permitted to prove a customary rate of speed, the other party should be allowed to prove that it was exceeded on the occasion in question.⁵¹

Occupant's knowledge of, and protest against, speed. Evidence of a complaint or protest by an occupant of a vehicle to the driver about the speed at which the vehicle was being driven is admissible where the speed of that vehicle is involved;⁵² but evidence of the occupant's knowledge that the driver customarily drove at a high rate of speed is properly excluded in the absence of proof that the occupant had reason to suspect that the driver would drive at such speed under hazardous conditions;⁵³ and the knowledge of the occupants of one vehicle that another vehicle approaching an intersection was exceeding the statutory speed limit is immaterial on the question of whether the driver of the other vehicle was negligent.⁵⁴

s. Statutes, Ordinances, Rules, or Regulations

In order to be admissible, a municipal traffic ordinance, or a highway rule or safety regulation adopted and promulgated by a state or municipal commission or department, must be valid and relevant.

In view of the evidence before the court,⁵⁵ or concessions made by both parties,⁵⁶ it may be proper to exclude traffic regulations offered by one party.

Statutes. A statute of another state where the accident occurred is admissible where it is relevant;⁵⁷ but not otherwise.⁵⁸ A particular statute of the state where the accident occurred and the action is tried may be irrelevant;⁵⁹ but, where the case in-

Weight of testimony

(1) The testimony of witness who witnessed actual impact between motor vehicle and truck or saw it a split second after collision, so as to obtain a mental picture thereof, must be given considerable weight.—Montifue v. American Mut. Liability Ins. Co., 1a App., 26 So.2d 407.

Scaife, La.App., 190 So. 829, followed in Midyett v. Scaife, 190 So. 832.

Weight of evidence

Testimony of motorist, identifying a truck encountered after he was forced off road as the one responsible for his accident, based on momentary glimpse of the offending vehicle, had no evidential value apart from the observations on which the conclusion as to identity was based, and mere fact that defendant's truck was intercepted at a point twenty miles from scene of accident, proceeding in direction in which offending vehicle had been moving, was of slight probative value in establishing identity of vehicle responsible for the accident.—Morris v. Twigg, Md., 68 A.2d 719.

Failure to identify vehicle at scene

Pedestrian's failure at scene of accident to state that he was struck by defendant's vehicle was entitled to little, if any, consideration, where pedestrian was suffering from shock.—Sanders v. Newsome, 19 S.E.2d 883, 179 Va. 582.

general rules have been applied in determining the weight and sufficiency of evidence as to the status of a vehicle involved in an accident,⁹⁴ or the ownership of a damaged vehicle.⁹⁵ There must be evidence from which the jury can reasonably infer that the vehicle causing the injury is owned by defendant,⁹⁶ or under his control,⁹⁷ and there can be no recovery when it is merely a matter of conjecture, surmise, speculation, or suspicion.⁹⁸ Plaintiff is required to prove defendant's ownership by a preponderance of the evidence,⁹⁹ but slight evidence of a substantial nature is sufficient to estab-

Defendant's name on vehicle. Proof that defendant's name was printed on the vehicle is not conclusive evidence of his ownership of the vehicle,³ but it is at least a circumstance tending that way in the absence of any contravening proof,⁴ and such evidence has frequently been held sufficient to establish ownership.⁵ Where another whose name was also on the vehicle admitted ownership, however, proof that defendant's name was placed on the vehicle for advertising purposes will warrant denial of recovery against defendant.⁶

though it has been said that the taking out of a license in one's own name does not of itself constitute proof of ownership,⁷ it is a circumstance tending to prove ownership,⁸ and evidence of license or registration in defendant's name, in connection with other evidence in the case, has frequently been held sufficient to establish ownership.⁹ The fact that a person who made application for the registration of a motor vehicle is found using a motor vehicle which bears the number issued therefor constitutes substantial evidence that the person who made the application is the owner thereof.¹⁰

e. Identity of Driver or Person in Control in General

General rules apply in determining the weight and sufficiency of the evidence as to the identity of the driver or person in control of the vehicle, or to overcome a presumption or inference of control or responsibility.

General rules have been applied in determining the weight and sufficiency of the evidence as to the identity of the driver or person in control of the motor vehicle causing the injury.¹³ In order to overcome a presumption or inference of control or responsibility of the owner, it has been held that the evidence must be clear, convincing, and uncon-tradicted,¹⁴ although, according to some cases, such a presumption disappears where there is substantial evidence to the contrary.¹⁵ So it has been held that the presumption disappears where on all the evidence it appears that the owner gave no permission for the use of the vehicle,¹⁶ but the presumption is not as a matter of law overcome by a mere denial of authorized control by the owner, when all circumstances are as consistent with such control as with lack of it.¹⁷ Clear proof is required before an owner who has hired out his vehicle with a driver of his own choice will be presumed to have surrendered full control to the hirer.¹⁸

Real relationship between owner and driver of motor vehicle at time of accident is ordinarily peculiarly within knowledge of such parties.—Weber v. Reagan, supra.

Driver of passenger bus

Where circumstantial evidence is relied on to prove the master-servant relationship between owner and driver of vehicle, it would ordinarily require stronger evidence in the case of an automobile or truck to negative the relation of bailor and bailee and prove that of master and servant between owner and operator than would be required in the case of a large passenger bus—Good v. Tennessee Coach Co., Tenn.App., 209 S.W.2d 41.

facts pertaining to the agency of the driver lie peculiarly within the knowledge of defendant, full and clear disclosure of such facts by defendant should be required to establish an affirmative defense.³⁴

Ownership. According to one view, a prima facie case of agency is established by proof that defendant owned the vehicle³⁵ or that it bore his license plates,³⁶ and it is held that such prima facie case is based on an inference, not on a presumption;³⁷ but there is authority holding that proof of ownership is not sufficient to establish a prima facie case.³⁸

Ownership and permissive use. Under some statutes, a prima facie case of agency is made out from proof of ownership and permissive use,³⁹ but such a prima facie case is based on an inference, and not a presumption.⁴⁰

Name on vehicle. Fact that defendant's name was printed on the vehicle is not conclusive evidence of the driver's agency for defendant,⁴¹ but it is at least a circumstance tending that way in the absence of any contravening proof,⁴² and there is authority holding that proof of such fact shows prima facie that the vehicle was being operated by defendant's servants at the time of the accident.⁴³

(c) Rebuttal

Plaintiff's prima facie case falls, and the inference of agency at the time and place of the accident is dispelled, when it is rebutted by clear, positive, and uncontradicted evidence, or, according to some cases, by substantial evidence.

A prima facie case of the driver's agency for the owner will stand in the absence of substantial proof to the contrary.⁴⁴ In order to dispel the inference of employment at the time and place of the accident established by plaintiff's prima facie case, defendant's evidence must be clear, positive, uncontradicted, and not open to doubt, according to one view,⁴⁵ and the prima facie case falls, and the inference of agency is dispelled, when it is rebutted by clear, positive, and uncontradicted evidence which is not open to doubt,⁴⁶ even though such evidence is produced by the opposite side,⁴⁷ and, according to some cases, where there is substantial evidence to the contrary.⁴⁸

(c) Rebuttal

(a) In General

The fact that the driver of a motor vehicle involved in an accident was at the time of the accident engaged in the performance of an act within the scope of his employment and while engaged in the defendant's business or for his purpose must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence, but circumstantial evidence may suffice.

There can be no recovery against a master or principal for injuries from the operation of a motor vehicle in the absence of proof that the agent was engaged in his master's business at the time of the accident,⁴⁹ and there must be direct proof or proof of facts from which that fact may reason-

dent.⁵² While the fact that the driver is acting for the owner may be shown by the circumstances,⁵³ proof of the relationship of master and servant on other occasions when the employee drove the employer's vehicle does not establish agency in driving the vehicle at a time when the employee was acting for himself without the employer's permission.⁵⁴ The fact that defendant's name was printed on the vehicle is not conclusive evidence that the driver was acting at the time of the accident within the scope of his employment,⁵⁵ but it is at least a circumstance tending that way in the absence of any contravening proof.⁵⁶

(b) Prima Facie Case

Circumstances which form a reasonable basis for finding that the vehicle at the time of the accident was being used in the defendant's business will suffice to make out a prima facie case.

defendant, establishes a prima facie case,⁶⁰ although there is also authority to the contrary.⁶¹ A prima facie case of respondeat superior may be made by evidence that defendant was owner of the offending vehicle, that it was being operated by a person generally employed by the owner as his servant, and that at the time of the accident the vehicle was being operated under conditions resembling those which normally attended its operation in the mas-

Reason for rule

Such a rule ignores the principle that one presumption may not be supported by another presumption; for, if it should be granted that on such facts a presumption that the driver was a servant of the owner would arise, the further presumption that such servant was in the course of his employment would have nothing to support it except the first-mentioned presumption.—Moreland v. Hawley Independent School Dist., supra.

ownership when considered with other circumstances in the evidence has been held sufficient to make a prima facie case for plaintiff.—Rockwell v. Standard Stamping Co., 241 S.W. 979, 210 Mo.App. 168—42 C.J. p 1232 note 23 [c].

Registration. By virtue of some statutes the fact that the vehicle was at the time of the accident operated by the driver for the use and benefit of the owner and within the scope of his employment may be proved by showing registration in defendant's name.⁶³

(c) Rebuttal

A prima facie case established by the plaintiff, or an inference or presumption that the driver was acting within the scope of his employment or was engaged in the defendant's business at the time of the accident, may be rebutted by testimony sufficient in weight to overcome it.⁶⁴

A prima facie case established by plaintiff is rebuttable by testimony sufficient in weight to overcome it.⁶⁴ According to one view, defendant must bring forth clear and convincing proof to overcome the inference or presumption that the driver was acting within the scope of his employment or was engaged in defendant's business at the time of the accident;⁶⁵ and the presumption is rebutted by clear, convincing, and uncontradicted evidence showing that the driver was not acting within the scope of his authority or employment⁶⁶ or was not engaged in the business, or for the use or on behalf, of defendant.⁶⁷ On the other hand, there is authority holding that clear, strong, convincing, and undisputed proof is not required to rebut a presumption that the driver was at the time and place of the accident operating the vehicle on the master's business, but it is necessary only to produce evidence that will reasonably satisfy the jury that the driver was not on the master's business;⁶⁸ and

68. U.S.—Terminal Transport Co., Inc. v. Foster, C.C.A. Ala., 164 F.2d 248, 250.

"A requirement that the defendant's evidence in rebuttal of the presumption be undisputed is necessary to justify the giving of a directed verdict for a defendant, but is not necessary to rebut the presumption before the jury."—Terminal Transport Co., Inc. v. Foster, supra.

so it has been held that the presumption disappears where there is substantial evidence to the contrary⁶⁹ or where the surrounding circumstances are such that its recognition is unreasonable.⁷⁰ The presumption may be overcome by positive proof that the driver was not at the time on a mission of his master⁷¹ or by proof that the employee was engaged in his personal affairs;⁷² but according to some cases the fact that there is uncontradicted evidence that the driver was not driving the vehicle for the purposes of the owner does not of itself remove the presumption.⁷³ The jury cannot arbitrarily or capriciously disregard the testimony of credible witnesses introduced to obviate the effect of the presumption, arising from proof of ownership, that the driver of the vehicle was acting within the scope of his employment.⁷⁴

(3) Servant Driving Own Vehicle

Proof that the vehicle driven by the alleged employee or agent was owned by him is not necessarily controlling on the question of the employer's ultimate liability; and evidence of the master's right or power to control the servant and the vehicle at the time of the accident may be sufficient to establish the master's liability.

Proof that the vehicle driven by the alleged employee or agent was owned by him is not necessarily controlling on the question of the alleged employer's ultimate liability⁷⁵ and does not of itself establish that the relation of master and servant did not exist.⁷⁶ No inference of agency arises from proof of ownership of the vehicle by the employee;⁷⁷ but evidence of the master's right or power to control the servant and the vehicle at the time of the accident is sufficient to establish the master's liability for injury resulting from the servant's negligence while in performance of duties owed the master,⁷⁸ even though the latter did not have actual control of the servant and the vehicle.⁷⁹ The employer's right of control of his employee's vehicle should, however, be implied only from reasonably clear evidence showing it.⁸⁰

The fact that the vehicle was owned by the driver, and not the employer, has evidentiary value,⁸¹ but is not conclusive,⁸² as to whether the vehicle was used in the scope of the driver's employment, and the fact that the accident occurred, and the errand was being performed, outside usual business hours has slight weight in determining the question.⁸³

g. Knowledge and Permission of Owner

Knowledge and permission of the owner must be affirmatively proved, and cannot be left to speculation or conjecture; but proof of ownership or of ownership and employment may be sufficient.

Where that fact is an issue in the case, whether the vehicle was being used at the time of the accident with the knowledge and permission of the owner must be affirmatively proved,⁸⁴ and the proof

Difficulty of proving permission and legal use of another's automobile does not change law of evidence or liability.—Atwater v. Lober, 233 N.Y.S. 309, 133 Misc. 652.

Use by unlicensed operator

Fact that driver of automobile at time of accident was unlicensed operator was insufficient to establish absence of owner's consent to operation of automobile by such person under statute providing that owner shall be responsible for injuries resulting from negligence in operation of automobile in business of owner or otherwise by person legally using or operating automobile with permission of owner.—Aarons v. must consist of facts and circumstances from which can follow the inference that the owner either expressly gave permission or that his acts and conduct were such that permission might be implied;⁸⁵ it cannot be left to speculation or conjecture.⁸⁶ There is authority to the effect that proof that the vehicle was owned by defendant and was negligently operated by an employee does not make a prima facie case of negligence against the owner unless it appears that the employee was driving with authority, express or implied, of the owner.⁸⁷ It has been held, however, that a prima facie case that the owner consented to the operation of the vehicle is made by proof of ownership⁸⁸ or by proof of defendant's ownership and that the operator is an employee of the owner.⁸⁹

In order to overcome a statutory presumption that a motor vehicle was being driven with the owner's knowledge and consent, the evidence must be direct, positive, and credible.⁹¹ A prima facie case is not overcome by the uncontradicted but inconclusive testimony of interested witnesses,⁹² but a statutory presumption that the vehicle was driven with the owner's consent ceases when there is uncontradicted proof that the vehicle was not at the time being used with the owner's permission,⁹³ or where the inference is rebutted by clear, positive, and uncontradicted evidence not subject to doubt in reasonable men's minds,⁹⁴ or, according to one view, where there is substantial evidence to the contrary.⁹⁵

General rules have been applied in determining the weight and sufficiency of the evidence to show that the motor vehicle was kept for family purposes and was being used at the time of the accident by a member of the family with the owner's sanction.⁹⁶ Circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to bring the doctrine into operation,⁹⁷ and may be adequate to overcome direct testimony to the contrary.⁹⁸ A presumption that the husband, as head of the family, was acting for himself may be overthrown by evidence that the wife was the furnisher of the home and the substantial, if not the sole, supplier of household needs.⁹⁹

The defendant's negligence must be established by a preponderance of the evidence or by substantial or prima facie proof; but circumstantial evidence may be sufficient. Substantial and convincing evidence is required to overcome presumptions as to negligence.

In an action brought to recover damages for injuries sustained as the result of the operation of a motor vehicle, negligence of the person sought to be charged must be established by a preponderance of the evidence,⁴ or by substantial evidence⁵ or prima facie proof;⁶ and, in determining whether the evidence is sufficient to establish negligence, all the facts and circumstances surrounding the accident must be weighed and considered.⁷ Plaintiff facts.¹¹ There must, however, be positive proof of circumstances from which the inference of negligence may be drawn.¹² Furthermore, in order to warrant a verdict for plaintiff based on circumstantial evidence alone, the circumstances relied on must be of such a nature and so related to each other that the only conclusion that can be fairly or reasonably drawn therefrom is the conclusion indicated by the verdict;¹³ it is not sufficient that the circumstances be consistent merely with plaintiff's theory,¹⁴ but it must be established that there was such negligence as makes plaintiff's theory reasonable and more probable than any other theory.¹⁵ Negligence must be reasonably shown;¹⁶ proof of defendant's negligence cannot rest in mere speculation, conjecture, or surmise.¹⁷ In order to hold defendant liable for driving in a careless and imprudent manner, there must be some evidence tending

A prima facie case is established by proof of facts showing that a collision resulted from defendant's act or omission and that defendant should have foreseen that the collision would result.¹⁹ In view of the rule stated supra § 511 (3) that negligence on the part of the operator cannot be inferred from the mere happening of an accident, mere proof that an accident happened is not sufficient to prove negligence on the part of the operator.²⁰ The fact that a motorist violates the rule of the road by driving on the wrong side of the street or highway is strong evidence of negligence.²¹

As against the owner who was not present when the accident occurred, the driver's negligence must be established by the usual rules which prevail in

Rebuttal. In order to overcome a presumption of negligence on the part of defendant, the evidence must be of a real and tangible nature.²⁴ It should not be vague or fanciful,²⁵ but must be substantial²⁶ and convincing.²⁷ In order to balance the presumption that his conduct was negligence per se, defendant is not required to establish his justification by a preponderance of the evidence.²⁸ Similar rules apply with respect to the sufficiency of evidence to overcome a presumption that the driver of defendant's vehicle was exercising due care and was not negligent.²⁹

In order to hold the owner of a motor vehicle liable on the theory of negligence in permitting an incompetent driver to drive, the latter's incompetence should be shown by specific acts of carelessness and recklessness committed by him.⁴³ Proof of the driver's negligence is necessary to hold the owner liable,⁴⁴ and so is evidence that the owner had knowledge of the driver's incompetence, inexperience, or reckless tendency as an operator or should have known thereof from the circumstances with which he was acquainted.⁴⁵ Evidence of the driver's reputation of incompetency is not conclusive.⁴⁶

(6) Equipment and Lights

Failure to comply with legal requirements as to equipment and lights, when relied on to establish negligence, must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence, but evidence of the defective condition thereof is not conclusive and may be rebutted.

Where such facts are relied on to establish negligence on the part of the owner or operator of the vehicle, plaintiff must establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the owner or driver failed to comply with the requirements of the law with reference to equipment⁴⁷ and the requirements of the law with reference to display of lights.⁴⁸ In order to show violation of a glaring headlamp statute, it must appear that the glare was more than that of a headlight properly equipped and adjusted.⁴⁹ Evidence of the defective condition of equipment does not conclusively establish violation of a statute in the absence of proof that the driver knew, or should have known, of the defective condition⁵⁰ and a prima facie case made by evidence of failure of equipment to operate may be rebutted by a showing of proper inspection and a sudden failure without warning.⁵¹ Where defendant relies on the defense of latent defects, the proof submitted must be such as to exclude any other rea-

(2) To authorize recovery by plain-erated the vehicle at a rate of speed prohibited by statute or ordinance.⁵⁶ In order to make out a prima facie case of negligence based on violation of a statute regulating speed, it is necessary to show a speed in excess of the maximum lawful speed fixed by the statute as applicable at the time, the place, and under the circumstances of the accident.⁵⁷ Proof of speed in excess of statutory limits is not, however, conclusive proof of the driver's negligence.⁵⁸ When it is sought to fasten negligence on one because of improper or unreasonable driving on a steep grade, neither the witnesses nor the jury should be left to conjecture; there should be proof that the grade in question was within the statutory definition thereof.⁵⁹ Evidence of speed is of little or no probative value where it does not relate to the speed at the time of the accident.⁶⁰

A description of the speed which in its very nature is largely conjectural and which lacks the certainty and precision necessary to impart a knowledge of any definite rate of speed is of little or no probative value,⁶¹ as where the witness testifies that the speed was "like lightning,"⁶² "fast,"⁶³

"pretty fast,"⁶⁴ "very fast,"⁶⁵ or "terrific,"⁶⁶ or that the vehicle was moving "at a good rate of speed"⁶⁷ or at a "pretty rapid gait,"⁶⁸ or that it came "of a sudden."⁶⁹ However, it has been held that a finding of negligence may be warranted on the basis of testimony that the vehicle traveled "quite fast," "quickly," and "rapidly."⁷⁰

sonable care was exercised by the driver;⁷¹ and this rule has been applied where there was evidence of fog⁷² or other obstructions of view,⁷³ rain, snow, and ice,⁷⁴ or where there was evidence that defendant's vehicle was swerving or zigzagging.⁷⁵

Circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to establish the speed at which a vehicle is being operated,⁷⁶ or to establish that the vehicle was negligently operated at an excessive speed,⁷⁷ and such evidence
